Mr. Brooks, of New-York, on Credit Mobilier McComb.

Discussion on the Secret Sessions of the Committee.

In Effort to Revive Duff Green's Molly Grievance.

Probable Change in the Postmastership at Chicago.

Strong Opposition to the French Spoliation Bill.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 17.—Hon. James Brooks had considerable to do with the examination of the Union Pacific Railroad Commissioners, that he had received his share of that stock for his influence on the Pacific railroad bill in the House. When he came to speak, the members immediately gathered in the corners of the House around Mr. Brooks, and he proceeded to draw the undivided attention of both floor and gallery. He occupied nearly one hour in his statement, the most of which was explanatory of his connection with the Union Pacific Railroad as a Government Director, though much of it was directed toward McComb personally, whom he excoriated without mercy, denouncing him as a perjured witness and a briber of Legislators, quoting from the testimony of the New-Orleans Investigating Committee, of last Winter to show that McComb furnished the money with which certain members of the Louisiana Legislature were purchased to favor certain railroad schemes in which McComb was interested. McComb (seated), Jas. Blaine, was on the floor during the delivery of his client, and watched the scene with a varying expression of anger and disgust. After recounting a great many circumstances to no was pertinent to the matter in hand, Mr. Brooks finally ended a sweeping denial of the allegation, which was broad enough to cover it, no matter in what shape it might be made. Then, he said, to have nothing evident or inferred which could be construed into a reflection upon him, he exhibited to the House a certificate for fifty shares of Crédit Mobilier stock, purchased some years since by his son-in-law, who had in his stock brokerage business, accompanied by the receipt for $2,000, which the man-in-law paid in cash for the said stock, on which transaction, Mr. Brooks said, might be founded some of the silly rumors now afloat in the country. He had never endeavored to conceal the circumstances of his connection with the Credit Mobilier, upon the entire transaction, and this was the first time he had mentioned the fact that he had received a share of the stock. He was ready to speak, the members immediately gathered in the corners of the House around Mr. Brooks, and the proceeded to draw the undivided attention of both floor and gallery. back by Mr. Ames from brethren who discovered what they deemed an opportunity in holding it. It is reported that testimony has been adduced before the Committee that a certain number of shares, said to be cash, were given outright to the corporators of the New-York Sun, for supposed newspaper influence; and it is considered probable that it will be shown that no stock was actually given except to this party, and that he made personal use of it solely. It seems to will probably be agreed that the witness shall be asked neither the amount nor the date of the gift, the matter being regarded as too far back to be pursued.

A subcommittee of Committee on Ways and Means, before the House Committee on Commerce this morning, in favor of a project for a ship canal connection between the Ohio River, and Brunswick, Ga., by way of the Tennessee. The Subcommittee of the House Committee on Commerce, to which the question of the Canal between Lake Erie and Portland Canal by the Government was referred, have considered the subject, and will report in favor of the transfer upon the conditions suggested by the Legislature of Kentucky.

THE CHICAGO POSTMASTERSHIP.

Col. Frank Eastman will shortly tender his resignation as Postmaster of Chicago, to take effect Feb. 15. Gen. J. MacArthur will, it is understood, be appointed his successor.

PERSONAL.

As an evidence of the increased attractiveness of Washington, it may be noted that the crowds of this city are now better at this early season of the season than for some years past, and the visitors comprise an unusual number of that class who are New-Yorkers and Boston. Among the arrivals, during the past twenty-four hours, are: Gen. W. H. Seward, Jr., of Auburn; Hon. R. A. Wells, of Connecticut; Lloyd Aspinwall, Esq., John B. Devlin, Wm. Orton, W. B. Dinsmore, and John Mary, of New-York; and Hon. Wm. Washburn, of Boston.

MISCELLANEOUS MATTERS AT WASHINGTON.

Capt. Morrill, Secretary of the Massachusetts State Central Committee, arrived here today on a subpoena to be examined before the school year of last Gate, which he has deposited with the President of the Senate.

FRENCH SPOLIATION.

Mr. Cameron, opposes the French Spoliation bill to come up again Thursday. To-morrow, after the morning hour, no business will be done, as the social announcement of the death of Senator Garrett Davis will be made, and obituaries be delivered. There is no disposition among the bill will pass the Senate, nevertheless prediction can be made on this point. The speeches of the Ohio Senators today against the payment of the claims were very positive and strong. Mr. Sherman declared that the claims had no legal or equitable foundation. A speech of Mr. Thurman, made in the House nearly twenty years ago against these claims, was the basis of a veto message by Franklin Pierce, and Mr. Thurman has not moderated his opposition since. Mr. Morrill, of Maine, was equally earnest in his advocacy of the payment of the claims. By 20 apparent that the difference are very great among Senators, and it may be that the opposition is strong enough to kill the measure upon the very threshold. As it is, so far the present session comes forward in the Senate, and its defeat in the Senate would send it back many years, or destroy it forever.

INDIAN APPROPRIATIONS.

There will be some effort made by the Senate Appropriation Committee to have the Indian Appropriation bill finished this week, but it is somewhat doubtful if action is secured on it till after the holidays. In that case all the appropriation bills will have to be passed through the Senate in about eight weeks, which will make impossible action on any other legislation which may be strongly contested.

AN IMPORTANT FORGERY.

The pretended facsimile letter attributed to Senator Pomeroy, and written ten years ago, turns out to have been written by one Edward Clark, who ran away from this city some years ago, to escape arrest and punishment for forgery. He was connected, for a time, with Mr. J. Ross Browne, and Mr. Browne's lawyer of this city, and the facsimile his written then passed to Pomeroy's name has long been known here, and the matter is now only revived because an election for Senator will soon be held in Kansas.

Dispatch to the Associated Press.

NEW-YORK, DEC. 17, 1872.

(On the 5th inst. the Secretary of War instructed Lieutenant-Colonel Clark, in a letter (read the Chief Signal Officer) and a copy of the Chief Signal Officer's report, to inquire into the causes of the daily reports. The Chief Signal Officer says the plan suggested seems to offer a more immediate and extensive method of reaching the whole interior and agricultural populations of the United States with information which such agencies can be obtained, than any hitherto made use of, any country in the world. The plan of work is to divide the territory west of the Mississippi into districts of about 500 miles in diameter, each district having a central station from which two copies of the reports will be mailed daily to all post-offices accessible by rail or mail-coach. By 8 P. M. each day. At each post-office the Postmaster is notified the copy of each report as soon as received in a frame to be furnished by the Signal Office, which frame will be put up in a conspicuous part of the office, where it can be seen, and the bulletins read by the public without difficulty. The second copy is intended for the personal use of the Postmaster, and may be disposed of in the manner he chooses best calculated to facilitate the information at his contracts. The Postmaster-General approves of the plan, has issued the following order, and says any further assistance that may be desired from the Department will be most cheerfully given:

WASHINGTON, D. C., Dec. 16, 1872.

Arrangements have been made between the Post-office and War Departments, by which one copy of the Signal Office daily reports will be furnished daily to all Postmasters designated by the Chief Signal Officer, and mailed from the central points of distribution daily by mail. As these reports are designed for the benefit of the farming interest as well as the commercial interest of the country, the Commissioner of Agriculture will furnish the Postmasters at such stations as may be designated by the Chief Signal Officer.

(Signed,) JOHN A. CRESWELL,
Postmaster-General.

NOMINATIONS.

The President sent the following nominations to the Senate, today: George Bliss, Jr., to be United States Attorney for the Southern District of New-York; Leander Cole, Postmaster at Saratoga Springs, New-York; Lincoln Jaccot, Consul at Montevideo; George C. Jaccot and Eugene Cossman, of Pennsylvania, and Robert T. Lyons, of Delaware, to be Second Lieutenants in the army.

CONFIRMATIONS.

The Senate in executive session today confirmed the following nominations:

Consuls—George K. Usher, at Asuncion; Augustus Merritt, at Mazatlan, Mexico.

Indian Agents—F. H. O'Connor, for the Sioux at Grand River; Wm. T. Hamilton, for the Blackfeet; J. B. Sanford, for the Upper Yellowstone; Gen. R. C. Richards, for the Hoopa Valley, California; Gen. Richards, for the Wichita Indian Territory; Henry Gardner, for the Seminoles; Daniel Sherman, for the Indians in New-York; H. W. Bingham, for the Sioux, Crow Creek and Lower Brule Agency; Charles F. Bickett, for Fort Berthold Agency, Dakota; W. F. Hall, Navajo agency, New-Mexico.

J. H. Brooks, minister of Consul of the District of Columbia, for Adolph Cluss, member of the Board of Public Works of the District of Columbia; Wm. H. Smith, Charles H. Nichols, James G. Barnet, Wm. J. Murtagh, and Henry M. Brooks, to be Police Commissioners of the District of Columbia.

C. A. Schofield was confirmed as Chief Engineer in the revenue marine service.

POSTAL EXPERIMENTS.

The House Committee on Appropriations having set apart this evening for the consideration of the subject of the postal telegraph, they had before them, by invitation, the Postmaster-General, Wm. Orton, President of the Western Union Telegraph Company, and Mr. Scott, its electrician; Mr. Thurston, President of the Pacific and Atlantic Telegraph Company; Mr. Swett, Superintendent of the Atlantic and Pacific Telegraph Company; Mr. Brown, President of the Franklin Telegraph Company; Gen. Rivers, Director of the Signal Service Bureau, and Hon. Wm. Washburn, counsel for the Government in telegraph matters together with others.

Mr. Orton addressed the Committee for about two hours against postal telegraph, criticising the report of the Postmaster-General on the subject, and showing the statistics were erroneous and his conclusions not reliable. In this elaborate argument he examined the Postmaster's statements in detail, contending, among other things, the estimates as to cost of telegraph lines had no proper basis. The report of the Postmaster-General was written by a gentleman named Lines, who was ignorant of the subject, and presented a mass of erroneous statistics. After Mr. Orton concluded his remarks the other representatives of telegraph companies corroborated his statements.

The Postmaster-General made a brief reply, saying he employed Mr. Lines to assist him in the preparation of the report, and as he himself had no personal acquaintance with telegraph matters, he had necessarily to rely on the knowledge of others. He regretted was to present a fair report. If such report were false, it was altogether unintentional on his part.

Mr. Lines made some remarks in defense of the report, when, at 11 o'clock, the Committee closed the conference.

THE PROPOSED NEW SILVER DOLLAR.

The amendment to the Coinage Bill, as reported by Senator Sherman, Chairman of the Senate Finance Committee, increases the weight of the proposed silver dollar one half of one per cent., making the weight 420 grains, the fineness remaining nine-tenths fine. The amendment also provides that the Secretary of the Treasury may issue the new dollar in exchange for other silver coin at the rate of one dollar for one dollar, and he is authorized to coin the bullion now in the Treasury into the new dollar. The Secretary of the Treasury is also authorized to issue the new dollar in payment for silver bullion

NEW PUBLICATIONS.

THE COMPLETE WORKS OF DR. J. G. HOLLAND. In ten Volumes. New-York: SCRIBNER, ARMSTRONG & CO. 1872.

Dr. Holland is known to be a prolific writer, but most persons will be surprised to find that his complete prose and poetical works fill out no less than ten compactly-printed volumes. Among them we have three volumes of verse, Bitter-Sweet, Katharine, and The Marble Prophecy, and two novels—Miss Gilbert's Career, and Bay Path. The remaining volumes are made up of those grateful and genial essays, mingly didactic in their character, upon which Dr. Holland's reputation will probably ultimately rest.

That Dr. Holland is a popular writer no one can doubt. His books, whether prose or verse, pass through countless editions, and are read and liked by innumerable readers. It has latterly been the fashion among certain tain flippant critics to assume that because these books are popular, therefore they are mediocre in point of merit. To substantiate this theory facts are, of course, necessary; and the one fact which could be trusted to its support is the universally recognized readiness of the author to inculcate Christian morality whenever the opportunity offers. The books are goody, we have been told. They bear evidence that they are written by one who holds that religion is a reality, and that literature ought not to be absolutely godless. Wherefore it is quietly assumed that they must be deficient in strength, originality, and conformity to the canons of art. Perhaps it is unnecessary to say that this conclusion is as untrue in fact as it is in theory.

In Dr. Holland's "Letters to the Joneses" and his other writings of a kindred scope, he urges young men and women to be honest, honorable, upright, and earnest. He advocates no sectarian dogma, and preaches no dull and trite sermon. He writes good, vigorous English. He teaches what we all know to be manly and true. He urges his readers onward in a path that at one can deny is the only road to true happiness, and he does so in a frank and genial manner, and with lavish wealth of pertinent illustrations and appropriate ornament. His deductive essays and letters are thoroughly well written, and undeniably interesting. The only fault to be found with them is that they are written upon the theory that the reader has an immortal soul, and that he will be the better if he keeps it unsullied by shame and sin. So, too, with Dr. Holland's poetry. It is not the poetry of Shakespeare or Milton, but it is intelligent in purpose and graceful in expression—the work of an accomplished minor poet. Yet, even here, the fact that the author believes virtue to be preferable to vice is apparent; and therefore we are told that he is not and never can be a poet.

Is it not time to protest against this assumption that in order to be artistic, literature must ignore God and religion? Is there any reason why the author, whose theme is the love of the sexes, should be accepted as a truer artist than he who teaches that man's relation to God is of more importance than his relation to woman? No one pretends that Dr. Holland's books are religious, in the usual acceptation of the term; but the fact that they do aim to make men better than they are, is the crime charged against them. He is witty, he is pathetic, he is earnest and vigorous and pure in style. Because he is a Christian, as well as a poet and an essayist, is that sufficient ground, in a professedly Christian community, for attacking and underrating the merit of his work?

For ourselves, we join with the vast majority of Dr. Holland's readers in thanking him for the good service he has done, both in the way of instruction and that of amusement. This new and complete edition of his works, attractive as it is in its mechanical execution, deserves a warm welcome; and that it will receive it, no one who knows the extent of the popularity which Dr. Holland has so worthily won will for a moment doubt.

OFF THE SKELLIGS. A Novel. By JEAN INGELOW. Boston: ROBERTS BROTHERS. 1872.

The first six chapters of this novel are admirable. They describe the childhood of the heroine and her brother, as told by herself, and form one of the most delightful studies of child life to be found in any literature. These two little people are drawn with rare fidelity to life, and are strongly and sharply individualized. There is no room for questioning the artistic merit of this part of the volume. Miss Ingelow has lingered over it with a firm, delicate, and loving pencil, until she has produced something much more worthy of her reputation than are any of her metrical writings. In fact, there is but one fault which can honestly be found with it, and that is the error which made it an introduction to a more pretentious work, instead of a study, complete in itself. For when the reader, whose expectations have been so thoroughly awakened by the beauty of these earlier chapters, proceeds to explore the dull and dreary regions that lie beyond, he is almost ready to resent the very excellence which lured him on in such a barren and unprofitable path.

The title of the book is suggested by the incident of the rescue of certain shipwrecked people by a yacht in which the heroine and her brother are cruising off the Skelligs, two isolated rocks near the coast of Kerry. The yacht is the property of a wholly preposterous uncle of the heroine, who spends his life-time in cruising in all available waters. Among the rescued passengers is a man of remarkable muscles and Christianity, who, of course, becomes the hero of the story, and, after a series of unnecessary misunderstandings, such as never take place between intelligent people, except in third-rate novels, finally marries the heroine. There is, also, an episodical brother of this muscular Christian who misconducts himself by making atrocious jokes, and by committing the more excusable offense of lifting the heroine, who, though she does not love him, has permitted herself to promise to marry him, on the apparent ground that his lungs are nearly as bad as his jokes. Of incident, however, there is next to none at all, after the rescue of the shipwrecked people, and nothing but the most careful and successful drawing of character could have made a novel with so little plot even tolerably interesting.

Unfortunately Miss Ingelow labors under the usual inability of women writers to create a hero that bears any except an outward resemblance to the actual flesh-and-blood man of every-day life. Of course the exceptional genius of George Eliot has been exceptionally successful in this department of fiction, but, as a rule, a woman's hero is a thoroughly unreal and thoroughly undesirable person. Miss Ingelow's shipwrecked lover is a cross between a muscular clergyman and a strong-minded maiden lady of advanced years, and even could the reader be brought to believe in his existence, such belief would be an extremely unpleasant possession. The other so-called man, to whom the author introduces us, are even more widely removed from humanity. The preposterous uncle would be considered altogether too preposterous for a "screaming farce," and the episodical brother is a calamity as impossible as the crash of Plantagenet's comet. Yet upon these characters the author has evidently lavished her entire strength, and the shadowy men and women, who are the supernumeraries of the play, leave no impression whatever upon the reader.

While, therefore, the introductory part of Off the Skelligs deserves unqualified praise, the work, regarded as a whole, must be called both dull and feeble. It is totally deficient in character, and is unrelieved by frequent incident or exceptional narrative skill. Were Miss Ingelow, however, to confine herself exclusively to painting child life, she would probably demonstrate her easy superiority to all other laborers in the same field.

THE UNFORTUNATE ITALIANS.

Meeting of the Commissioners of Emigration Yesterday—A Report of Investigating Committee.

The Commissioners of Emigration held a special meeting yesterday, at which the subject of the destitute Italian laborers was introduced. A letter was read from the Secretary of State, who says that the United States authorities in Italy will be instructed to adopt such measures as may be necessary to prevent a repetition of the grievances they complain of.

Mr. O'Gorman said he had no reason to doubt that these Italians were honest, industrious people, who were quite willing to work. There still remained 250 on Ward's Island, most of whom would go to Virginia on Saturday, and fifty went to Central Connecticut to obtain employment.

Commissioner Lynch said he believed that the Italian residents of the City had done all they could to ameliorate the condition of these emigrants. One of them, Mr. Fabbri, had undertaken to pay the railroad fare of those going to Virginia.

A report to the Commissioners made by Capt. O. H. Tree, the Castle Garden interpreter, gives the following account of the imposition practiced upon the immigrants whose cases he has investigated.

First—They had no idea of coming to this country; most of them were induced to emigrate through a circular distributed by the agents of emigration companies, which gave a glowing description of the position and wages that could be obtained in America. The circulars were disseminated through the hamlets and villages of the interior of Italy. Second—They had all borrowed money to come to America; some in cash, others by giving mortgages on their property, with the agreement that the passage-money advanced was to be repaid within twelve months, with the addition of fifteen per cent interest. Third—Some of the immigrants paid their passage money to agents. Fourth—They reached Havre by different routes, and were there detained from two to fifteen days, costing them three francs per day. Fifth—The steam-ship that was bound to Buenos Ayres sailed from Havre a few days previous to their arrival at that port. Sixth—The agents in Havre induced them to wait, and go to New-York, as there was a better opportunity to get employment in that City than in Buenos Ayres. Seventh—The tickets given to them in different parts of Italy were taken from them before they reached Havre. Eighth—In Havre other tickets were given them. These were taken from them in mid-ocean by the Captain of the steamer. They have arrived in New-York destitute, and some of them have been kept in such ignorance that they do not know whether they are in New-York or Buenos Ayres. The baggage of many of them who have arrived in New-York was sent to Buenos Ayres. They all complain that they have been defrauded in Italy by the runners of the agents, who, they believe, have been authorized by the Italian Government.

STATEMENT OF THE ITALIAN CONSUL-GENERAL.

A communication has been received from Mr. Ferdinando Leca, Consul-General of Italy in the United States, in which he repeats, though at greater length, the statement made by him to a Tribune reporter a few days ago. On the question of not meeting the fact that a number of the Italians are dependent on the Commissioners of Charities, the Consul-General says he does "not intend to meet it, knowing the loss that these laborers and artisans are to Italy," and the benefit to be derived from their labor in this country. He considers the "temporary expense of supporting them for a short time a good investment for the country," and cites authorities who have estimated "the average capital value of each immigrant, both as producer and consumer." "If the cost of immigration is not paid back here," he says, the Consul-General suggests, "the best mode to repress their conflux is to let the United States Legation in Rome publish in the Italian papers a notice warning those emigrants against the hardships to which they will be exposed in coming here in the condition they do." This advice would be respected, while the same from the Italian Government would be suspected.

THE FIFTH-AVENUE HOTEL FIRE.

Additional Testimony Taken Yesterday by the Fire-Marshal—The Time of the Fire.

Fire-Marshal McSpedon yesterday took the following additional testimony in relation to the Fifth-avenue Hotel fire, for the purpose of establishing the time that the alarm was sent out to the Fire Department:

Patrolman James M'Cormick, of the Twenty-ninth Precinct, testified: At the time of the fire in the Fifth-avenue Hotel I was on post on Twenty-second-street, from Fourth to Seventh avenues. I came up Twenty-second-street from Fourth-avenue, and at the corner of Sixth-avenue I met a young man who said he had had heard any alarms; I told him I had not. I passed on the east side of Broadway for a few moments, and then I heard screams, and saw a man running down the street, and I followed him. I passed by Delmonico's, asked him what was the matter, and he said that the Fifth-avenue Hotel was on fire. I asked him if he was sure, and he said, "Yes." I then ran to the Sixth-avenue box in front of the Gilsey House, which is on Fifth-avenue, between Twenty-first and Twenty-second streets, and sent out an alarm. I heard no any of it there; after sending out the alarm I remained at the box until the Second-avenue engine came. I told the officer in command where the fire was; I think the first engine arrived in two or three minutes; I then went up to Twenty-third-street, and called the officer on that post; he came to me from the direction of Sixth-avenue; I ordered a Hookout door of the first unit, the report arrived; I think it was about quarter past 8. I then went to Madison-avenue and the alarm; I should think it was ten minutes elapsed from the time the young man asked me if I had heard screams until I sent out the alarm.

The General Sessions Grand Jurors.

The following-named gentlemen were drawn yesterday, in Supreme Court Chambers, and will be summoned, to serve on the Grand Jury of the Court of General Sessions for the January term:

Robert Hook, Richard H. Butler, Charles H. Contoll, Daniel D. Bedell, Benjamin F. Wheelright, Nathaniel S. Wing, Azariah L. Ashman, Ferdinand F. Dufaux, Gordon W. Burnham, Mottet Cohn, William Ransom, Josiah Jacks, Frederick V. Noyes, Augustus F. Pearce, Hervey Dayer, Ezekiel C. Williams, R. Sugdam Grant, Seraseed K. Murphy, Homer Franklin, Edwin Yard, Rudolph A. Witthaus, Roland S. Doty, Philip Dater, Henry G. Griffin, William L. Felt, Lawrence N. Fuller, Benjamin J. Hart, Edward Fanning, Alexander Hamilton, Orlando E. Powers, Frederick H. Jackson, Frederick Habirshaw, Oliver J. Ferris, Lewis Stiner, John S. Rice, Simon Bernheimer, Felix Astoul, Francis H. Amidon, Robert G. Cornell, Joseph F. Bartlett, Lucius S. Comstock, Nathaniel Ellis, Nathaniel Rowe, Henry D. Felice, Andrew C. Armstrong, Charles H. Nichols, Adolph G. Bumm, Ernst Korner, Amos R. Eno, and Marshall Vonezat.

The Danish Consulship.

Mr. Christensen, Consul of Denmark, acknowledges the receipt of the following further contributions for the benefit of the sufferers by the above calamity: Niels Poulson, $5; Fred. R. G. Sruding, $5; Oscar Frederickson, $5; Cash, $10; J. L. C., $15; Attaches of Castle Garden, (second contribution,) $26 75; J. C. & P., (gold,) $20; Rev. O. Just and other sympathizers at Forts Ambon, $32; J. J. T. B., $100; Consul Bunge and other sympathizers at Chicago, $100; Consul Lewis and other sympathizers at Baltimore, $100; H. B., $100; J. S. & Co., $250; Consul Brunner and other sympathizers at Boston, $200; Consul Sayles and other sympathizers at Philadelphia, $200; D. S. & Co., $250; total, $1,572 [illegible] previously acknowledged, $2,160 82. Total, $3,732 82. Further valuable assistance of a pecuniary character has been made, making 3,000 Rix dollars remitted, in all. Recent mail arrivals from Denmark clearly show that the disaster had a thrilling effect by the tremendous, horrisonous shock, fearful, deafness, terror and, more, wide-spread than the telegraphic reports indicated, and further contributions are certainly wanted.

A Question of Jurisdiction—Motion to Quash a Bankruptcy.

Nathan Bach, a bankrupt, now in the custody of Marshal Sharpe, for the purpose of being examined before Register Ketcham, obtained, through his counsel, a writ of habeas corpus from Judge Ingraham, of the Supreme Court, now sitting in Oyer and Terminer, requiring Gen. Sharpe to produce the body of the bankrupt in Court this morning, and to show cause why he is detained in custody. The writ was served on the Marshal yesterday, and was promptly made return that Bach is held in custody on the order and process of the United States District Court, and stating that, as advised, he (Sharpe) declines respectfully to produce the body of the prisoner before Judge Ingraham.

THE PAY-ROLL SWINDLE.

Fresh Frauds Being Discovered Each Day—Arrests to be Made—The Feeling Among the Rings on the Work.

The investigation into the fraudulent pay-roll swindle in the Department of Public Works is proceeding vigorously, and each day some fresh frauds are discovered. It has been already ascertained that on the big pipe work, on Tenth-avenue, between Ninety-third and One Hundred and Thirteenth streets, alone, there are 100 men drawing money who do not belong to the Department of Public Works, although they are on the pay-rolls furnished by the officials to the City Pay-master. Taking the average month's pay of each man to be $60—and that is a very low estimate—it will be seen that the City is being defrauded to the tune of $6,000 a month, or $60,000 a year. If you remember to be such how many of the officials connected with the work have a share in this wholesale plunder. On other of the public works a similar system of fraud has been in operation, it is believed, but probably not to the extent it is on the big pipe work. Tenth-avenue. In a few days, when sufficient evidence has been collected, and some more arrests effected, all the facts will be placed before the public. A visit was made yesterday to the sub-engineers on the big pipe work of the Boston Advertiser and TIMES reporter, and the chief topic of discussion among the men was naturally enough the pay-roll frauds just discovered. The men generally were frank in expressing themselves as much gratified by the exposure and discovery of the swindle. It is the same in the case of the laborers and others who could scarcely fail to attach itself in the public mind to all concerned on the work, as long as the responsibility for the fraud known to exist was not fixed where it properly belonged. The swindle was much too extensive and bears evidence of being so carefully planned as not to be put aside as the product of a few men suled from a distance, and undoubtedly far west of Depot, superviews. On the big pipe work there are 40 men employed. These are divided into gangs of 20 men, and to each gang is appointed a foreman, so that if a man absents himself from work his absence is immediately noted. The pay-roll is made out from information received from the foreman, who reads the names on the pay-roll, and it is believed that this will be the solution of the matter.

The public may rest assured that the swindle will be probed to the very bottom, and that the guilty parties, whoever they may be, will be duly prosecuted.

A Rather Picture-Outrageous Personal Image by an Innocent Officer.

Patrolman John Dunn, of the Twenty-ninth Precinct, was arraigned before the Police Commissioners yesterday, on a charge of improper conduct preferred by Mr. Marcus Tappman, of No. 318 Sixth-avenue. He stated that on the 6th inst. a woman entered his store, ostensibly to adjust her clothing, which had apparently become disarranged, and while there attempted to induce the young ladies employed in the store to purchase copies of a recently-condemned weekly publication. The young ladies refused to buy, and Mr. Lapman ordered the woman to leave the store. She then began a discourse on free love, and when ordered a second time to leave, she greeted Mr. Lipman with a tirade of abuse, calling him a murderly Jew, caring for nothing but dollars and cents, and threatened to sell every person she met that he was a Jew, Christ, and a cheat. The woman left, but, in a few moments, returned, and threw into the store a piece of paper, on which was scribbled in pencil, "Murder is in your hearts, like the ancient Jews, and they put Christ to death." She then stationed herself in front of the store, and informed every person who came into the store, and passers-by, that they were robbers and cheats there, and warned them not to make purchases. The conduct of the woman collected a crowd about the door, and Officer Dunn was requested to arrest or remove the woman, but this he refused to do. Mr. Lipman remonstrated with the officer when the latter remarked he "didn't see the woman do nothing." The complainant thereupon took his number, and this so enraged the officer that he seized him by the collar and dragged him through the streets like a felon, and had him locked up at the West Thirteenth-street Police Station, on the charge of being drunk and disorderly. In both a cell, he was brought before Justice Ledwith, at the Jefferson Market Police Court, and discharged. This statement was, in the main, corroborated by several of those in the store at the time, and Miss Agnes Henry, one of the employes, stated that the woman, dressed by Officer Dunn to present during the controversy, was so obscene and abusive that she could not be induced to repeat it. Officer Dunn, in his defense, did not controvert the accusation made against him, but contented himself by repeating that he "hadn't saw the woman do nothing." The officer said that Mr. Lapman was excited, and, after taking his number, remarked: "It is hard if citizens cannot be protected!" and he thereupon arrested him. The case was referred to the Board, and it is more than probable that Dunn will be dismissed.

The Eighth National Bank—Meeting of the Depositors' Investigating Committee.

The Depositors' Investigating Committee of the Eighth National Bank held a meeting yesterday, for the purpose of making arrangements for the criminal prosecution of the Directors and officers of the bankrupt institution. Mr. Johnson presided, and stated the present condition of the bank and the prospects of the depositors in obtaining another dividend.

It was moved that a subscription be started to fee counsel to institute criminal proceedings. A depositor stated that he was unwilling to take such extreme measures, and thought that by arging the Directors they might be induced to pay up the deficit in the assets of the bank. Another depositor stated that this course had been suggested to the Directors and officers, but without result, and recommended starting a subscription at once. After some further discussion it was agreed to employ counsel, and $250 was contributed. The committee then visited the Receiver, Mr. Alvord, and obtained a subscription of $500 received, and Mr. Johnson expects that $1,000 will be subscribed before the Committee meets again.

Dr. Irish's Trial—Mrs. Anderson Not Allowed to Testify—Evidence as to the Reputation of the Accused.

The trial of Dr. Irish was resumed yesterday, in the Court of Oyer and Terminer, Brooklyn. The fact that no effort would be made to have Mrs. Anderson brought into Court to testify caused a large attendance in Court.

Judge Pratt said he could not find any authority for admitting Mrs. Anderson's testimony; but the application being pressed, the Judge reserved his decision.

John C. Pollock testified that the interview between Anderson and Dr. Irish, spoken of by witness yesterday, was very friendly, so far as he could judge. It was a confidential talk.

Several witnesses were examined, and testified to the character of Mrs. Anderson, and to the kindly relations existing between the Irish and Anderson families, after which the case was adjourned till today.

New-York Colonization Society.

The annual meeting of the New-York Colonization Society was held yesterday, at the Bible House. The annual report stated that the object of the Society was to co-operate with, and encourage such agencies of the Parent Society in this State, and alluded to the work of the Twenty-fifth Secretary of the National Society, who had received $18,000. Mention was made of the embarkation of 150 emigrants for Liberia.

Rev. Benjamin I. Haight, D. D., President; Hon. Thos. W. Olcott, D. D., Rev. John E. Rockwell, D. D., Rev. Samuel W. Fisher, D. D., Right Rev. Horatio Potter, D. D., Rev. G. W. Hecock, D. D., and Stephen H. Buckingham, Esq., Vice-Presidents; and Almon Merwin, Secretary and Treasurer, were re-elected for the ensuing year. An Executive Committee and Board of Managers were also elected. A delegation was appointed to attend the annual meeting of the American Colonization Society, at Washington, in January.

Business in the Court of General Sessions.

In the Court of General Sessions, yesterday, before Recorder Hackett, John Young, convicted of grand larceny, was sent to Sing Sing Prison for three years and six months. Peter Wiley, alias Henry Marshall, alias George Delmar, who has already spent nineteen years in Sing Sing, was convicted of petty larceny; sentence was deferred. James Meehan, for grand larceny, was sent to State Prison for three years and six months. William Moore was indicted for robbery in the third degree, and pleaded guilty as a shade of petit larceny; he was sent to State Prison for two years. John McMullen was convicted of robbery in the third degree, and was sentenced to State Prison for seven years.

Criminal Business in the Court of Oyer and Terminer.

In the Court of Oyer and Terminer, yesterday, counsel for James O'Neill, charged with the murder of Anthony F. O'Neill, asked for a postponement of his trial pending the returns of a commission to take testimony in Germany. It is claimed that through this commission testimony will be procured showing that in former years Kilty was compelled to take a sea voyage in consequence of an attack of acute mania. The motion for a postponement was opposed on behalf of the people, and the Judge reserved his decision.

The case of Thomas Farrell, charged with the murder of a lunatic on Blackwell's Island, was sent to the Court of General Sessions.

The following-named were convicted and sentenced: John Hanson, grand larceny, two years and six months in State Prison; William Delano, larceny, one year in the Penitentiary.

FORTY-SECOND CONGRESS.

UNITED STATES SENATE.

SENATE.—WASHINGTON, Tuesday, Dec. 17, 1872.

The Vice-President appointed the following committee to consider the question of providing cheaper transportation from the West to the Atlantic seaboard: Messrs. Windom, of Minnesota; Sherman, of Ohio; Conkling, of New-York; Hill, of Vermont; Lewis, of Virginia; Connover, of California; and Hill, of Georgia.

The Vice-President also appointed Messrs. Morrill, of Maine, and Osborn, of Florida, to fill vacancies on the Military Committee.

REPORTING OF THE REGIMENTAL COLORS.

The Vice-President laid before the Senate the resolution from the House directing, pending the moving from his army headquarters, and the regimental colors the names of the battles of the rebellion.

Mr. EDMUNDS, of Vermont, objected to the resolution will be put upon its passage at this time.

Mr. SUMNER, of Massachusetts—I object.

Mr. EDMUNDS—Then I give notice that I shall ask the Senate to take it up to-morrow.

THE ARKANSAS ELECTION.

Mr. Rice, of Arkansas, offered a resolution reciting allegations of fraud in the late election in Arkansas and a contested election in the House, and of a committee of five to go to Little Rock, Ark., and investigate the matter; the committee to have power to send for persons and papers, and to sit with open doors. Laid on the table.

Mr. Rice gave notice that he would call up the resolution on Thursday next.

LIFE-SAVING STATIONS.

Mr. Anthony, of R. I., called up the bill to authorize the appointment of keepers of life-saving stations at Cape Cod and Block Island, which was passed.

The Senate took up the calendar, and the following bills were passed: Relating to the claim of John B. Chapman; for the relief of Thomas Hollis; for the relief of W. H. Kirk.

THE INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. Cragin, of New-Hampshire, from the Appropriations, reported the Indian Appropriation bill, with various amendments.

Mr. Thurman, of Ohio, followed in opposition to the bill.

Mr. Morrill, of Maine, made an elaborate report in support of it.

At 6 o'clock P. M. the matter was still undecided when the Senate went into executive session.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

Mr. Hunter, of Illinois, from the Judiciary Committee, reported back the bill creating a commission to ascertain the compensation of claimants for damages under the Geneva award, and moved that it be referred to the Judiciary Committee of the Senate, as the subject-matter of all claims of a foreign character. He ordered [illegible] 500,000 [illegible]

Also, the bill appropriating Government [illegible] to pay the deficiency in the Diplomatic and Consular Appropriation.

Also, the bill to amend the act regulating the consular and diplomatic service, which was made the special order, after a long debate, for Friday.

Also, a bill making a provision for surveying and marking the boundary line through the Haro Channel, between the territory of the United States and the British possessions. Passed.

Also, the Senate amendments to the bill to authorize the President to invite foreign nations to participate in the advantages of the International Exposition at Vienna in 1873, and appropriating $100,000, was reported, and Mr. Hunter gave an explanation of the Senate amendments.

The bill was discussed through the morning hour, and went over until to-morrow.

PAYING MORMINS AND ALL SMOKERS.

Mr. Brooks, of New-York, rose to a question of personal privilege, and said that a statement in the New-York Herald and World that he, R. R. McCook, had testified before the Credit Mobilier Investigating Committee that he (Brooks) had secreted stock belonging to the Union Pacific Railroad Company. He said he had been in public life a quarter of a century, and had never had a dollar of stock or a bribe in his way to repay, or any charge of that nature. He was now a member of one of the most important committees of the House—the Committee of Ways and Means; and if it was thought he was unfit to be a member of the House, and ought to be expelled, not only from the House, but from all association with decent men, he (Brooks) charged upon prominent Republican officials [illegible] made during the last Presidential campaign, in connection with this same matter, he (Mr. Brooks) had written himself of every opportunity to publish the private, or public, or official acts in them so far as he knew, and he spoke with some authority, as he was, and had been for many years, a Government Director of the Union Pacific Railroad Company, which had been [illegible] by President Johnson. He utterly denied the statement now made with regard to himself by the same McCook, and ridiculed the idea of his attempting to secrete stock. He had not received money, nor bribe of any shares of Credit Mobilier stock, representing $6,000. He did not recollect that he ever spoke to a Democratic member on the subject of the Union Pacific Railroad. He had refrained from doing so out of delicacy, because he was a Director of the road. He certainly never had intended to influence a member in any vote he might be called upon to give. He proceeded to refer to McCook as a man who had no character and who had never had any character; and who was shown by the record of his military connection, now on file in the War Department, to be a robber and a knave, and was also known by the record of the House Investigating Committee to have [illegible] the Louisiana Legislature, in order to get hold of the New-Orleans and Jackson Railroad. He was known to have offered to sell his influence for the Pacific Railroad, he said he did not know of any law that was prohibitive, [illegible] and whether it was or not was a matter of no consequence. He did not recollect conversing that he had received a reward, or any matter, connected with the Union Pacific Railroad, he had refrained from decent men and gentlemen, from a moral point of view, but he was not ashamed of the subject. He had never received directly or indirectly, a single share of Credit Mobilier stock, despite the testimony of the witness to the contrary. He had never received a dollar of McCook's villainous compensation. He had a daughter, who was married to a young man who was somewhat speculating in Wall-street, and this was the only thing he had ever had from Mr. McCook. He (Brooks) was not responsible for that. He thanked God that person had bought forty shares of that stock, paying for it $1,000; and it was out of that money that he had paid his daughter up the whole story about fifty shares being given to him. (Mr. Brooks) in conclusion, repeated the charge of the House. He could not, however, refrain from [illegible] to find fault in him, from top to bottom, and if they found any fault in him, to report it to the House, and to discharge him.

Mr. Kasson, of Iowa, from the Committee of the special Commission, stated that the Committee had unanimously decided not to allow newspaper reporters, or any other outsiders of those immediately connected with the Committee and all persons who were allowed to be present, had been required to give an assurance that the proceedings before the Committee should be kept secret, that whatever was examined to be [illegible] the Committee, whether much or little, should be made public, whenever and not be published in the interim, and that the newspaper statements of what purported to have been said and done in the Committee, he had no doubt that which Mr. Brooks complained of, but nearly all that he had read in the newspapers was false in fact, in the proceedings of the Committee was serious. (Laughter.) What had been said, or whether anything had been said about Mr. Brooks, or anybody else, he was not in a position to state. But if any testimony were brought before the Committee implicating any member of the House, the Committee would require him to make the Sergeant-at-Arms, and the Sergeant-at-Arms would be required to ascertain the whole truth in the matter, and it would be for the House to do what it thought proper. Mr. Wood, of New-York, suggested whether it was not better to have the proceedings of the Committee made with open doors. It was wrong for the people to be informed day by day exactly what had transpired before the Committee was.

Mr. Poland replied that whether wisely or not, the Committee had decided unanimously that it was not desirable to have open sessions. He had been on the Committee that had been amply supplied with power to send for persons and papers, and had never had any [illegible] to contradictory as it there had been no newspaper reporters present at all. (Laughter.) He was not aware that the public had such a mournful anxiety on the subject, and he would be willing to wait till the Committee made its report.

Mr. Harrick, of Maryland, a member of the special Committee, suggested to Mr. Wood to take the sense of the House on the question of the propriety of open sessions.

Mr. Sargent, of California, asked for the regular order of business.

Mr. Young, of Georgia, said he had a resolution which he should like to submit to the judgment of the House, and he asked that it be read. The resolution was read. It recites the allegation of gigantic frauds having been committed by the Government and people of the United States by the Union Pacific Railroad Company, and that the special Committee already raised report, and directed to the charges of bribery and corruption of members of Congress. It therefore resolves that the special Committee be to investigate fully the history of the Credit Mobilier, and whether any fraud has been committed through it on the Government or people of the United States; and if it proves the affirmative, it shall be the duty of the Committee to report to the House.

After some discussion, Mr. Sargent objected to further debate, and called for the regular order of business, which was the Indian Appropriation bill.

Mr. Wood, of New-York, asked to be allowed to offer a resolution on the subject of the special Committee.

Mr. Pease, of Mississippi, objected.

THE SUNKEN WRECK AT SANDY HOOK.

The matter was then passed over, and on motion of Mr. Cox, of New-York, the report of the Conference Committee on the bill to remove the sunken wreck from the channel of Sandy Hook was taken up and agreed to. The bill now goes to the President for his signature.

FUGITIVES FROM OHIO, INDIANA AND ILLINOIS.

The House then took up a special order a bill reported from the Judiciary Committee, to carry into the enforcement, with the states of Ohio, Indiana and Illinois, of the five per cent. of the net proceeds of the sale of public lands within those States.

The bill was finally passed, yeas 95, nays 58, the latter mostly Democrats.

Pacific Mail Steamer Great Republic Stranded.

News was received yesterday of the disabling of the Pacific Mail steamer Great Republic, by the breaking of a main shaft while at sea. She was on the way from Hong-Kong and Yokohama to San Francisco when the accident occurred. The ship proceeded under sail to San Francisco with but trifling delay. The only loss which the Company will suffer is that involved in the delay, consequent upon replacing the shaft, and the attendant expense. The Great Republic will be ready for sea preliminary to a short voyage.

THE HOLIDAY BOOKS.

Publications of the Harpers—Superb Collections of Literature—Editions by the Little Brown—Superb Illustrations of Painting and Wine Art.

Something of the pleasure which the romantic bookworm might be supposed to feel on entering a well-stocked library comes over the visitor when making the tour of the publication rooms of Harper Brothers' establishment. If the loaded shelves and tables did not happen to contain the immense number of volumes published by this firm, the bulky octavo volume which their catalogue makes would certainly do it. Entering over the twenty-pointed stairs, we find works in every department of literature; and these, in several editions, to meet the wants and means of all classes of purchasers. Of books intended simply for the holidays, there are not a few, issued now, and yet in number; but the selection made of material is an excellent one, and many works which have proved popular among young readers are now bound in an attractive style, fitting them especially for holiday presents. A series of short and pleasant stories, addressed to girls, and written by the author of John Halifax, Gentleman, have been so largely called for, that the supply scarcely keeps pace with the demand. They are written in a pleasant, sparkling style, are illustrated, and very neatly bound. Paul du Chaillu's books for young people are of course as popular as ever. His stories of the gorilla country, his wild life under the equator, lost in the jungle, &c., appeal to the heart of every boy reader, and the scenes depicted by his facile pen are brought vividly before the mind of the young reader by the illustrations which adorn the volumes. Rev. J. G. Wood's Homes Without Hands makes an excellent Christmas book. It is profusely illustrated, and has enjoyed a wide popularity on the other side of the Atlantic. Dogs and their Doings is another work of the same class, elegantly printed, and well illustrated. Incidents of a Dog's Life, by Colonel Hawker, is in fact, interesting to readers of all ages, and many of the engravings are from pictures by Landseer. The shepherd dog mourning over the grave of his master is a noticeable good specimen of illustrative art. Harpers' Story Books, containing each a complete story, are those for the young, suitable for holiday gifts. They are sold separately, or complete in twelve volumes, and are bound in various styles. The same may be said of Children's Picture Books. These are octavo volumes, of 320 pages each, and illustrations abundant. Of Harper's Pictorial Bible, as we have before stated, Overbeck's text and illustrations, a few years ago, a book intended solely for the edification of children, illustrated by eminent artists, was undoubtedly the most popular of the volumes issued. Some of the illustrations are perhaps, in this respect, not in the accepted sense of the term, "pretty," but there is a promise that the rising generation of readers will be the better judges of artistic skill than the present one. There seems no more reason for using badly-executed or miserably-drawn illustrations in children's books than for printing them on inferior paper and in ugly type. The abundance and cheapness of well-illustrated works, such as published by the Messrs. Harper, are an educational help not to be lightly estimated. A Year of a Young Naturalist is a book of that class, intended for boys, and very popular. It is from the pen of Louis Figuier, and presents some strange details of a party exploring the tropical forests, and the many odd habits and extraordinary creatures they came across in their travels. The descriptions were all the well-known severity of French writers, and the illustrations are of a high order. The best work of French artists, and of unusual excellence. Few books could be found more acceptable as a Christmas present to the average boy, who devours a work of this character with as much relish as he does his dinner.

Turning to works of a graver character, we find among the new publications Ellsee Reclus' The Earth, and its companion volume, The Ocean. These volumes are descriptive histories of the phenomena of the life of the globe, and are largely illustrated by carefully-drawn and finished wood-cuts. Of Charles Reade's novels, intended for travelling and seaside, and, for the convenience of the former, bound in paper covers, to permit of its being doubled up for the pocket, Hudson's History of Journalism in the United States will be issued in a few days, and the orders for it have been very large. Hudson's work, which, to those who have made a study of the Students' series, is a most useful addition to a limited literature. The volumes are cheap, and the selection of standard authors good. Hallam's Middle Ages, Gibbon's Rome, Lyell's Manual of Geology are among the volumes comprising the series, which is a sufficient recommendation of its. Major-Gen. Hamley's The School and the Army in Germany and France is a timely publication. Any one desiring an intelligent opinion of the relative efficiency of the French and German was would do well to get this volume. It is well printed and handsomely bound. A cheap edition, in handsome binding, of the works of Tennyson has been recently issued. It contains his latest poems, and the illustrations have been designed by some of the most eminent foreign illustrators of this poet. The type is clear, and the paper good, and the cheap price at which it is issued, gives it much popularity as a Christmas book. It is bound in uniform style with People's Edition of Dickens issued by the house.

Of the Harpers' Magazine, Weekly, and Bazar, it is scarcely necessary to speak. Lower terms are offered for the opening year, and the three publications are now supplied for one year for $10, or any two of them for $7. They are popular journals, and, in all the works issuing from this house, deserve the favor which they enjoy with the public.

SHELDON & CO.

The holiday catalogue issued by Sheldon & Co. is an extensive one, and embraces the best standard literature, in poetry and prose, bound in styles suitable for the drawing-room, the library, and for presentation. A large number of Auerbach's books are included in the catalogue, mostly by Jacob Abbott, who seems to enjoy an almost undisputed popularity as a juvenile writer. Probably one of the greatest successes achieved by him was in the Rollo Books, first published thirty years ago, but no less popular now than when they were issued. These books were followed by Rollo's Tour in Europe, by the same author; a series of American Histories; the Florence Series, and the Harlie Stories. All these are among the Sheldon books issued by Sheldon & Co., with Peter Parley's Cottage Library, R. G. Parley's Library, and the Harper's Library. Series for Young Ones, by Miss Sarah W. Lander; Aunt Fannie's Pop-Gun Stories, and Pictures and Stories of Animals, containing over 500 pictures, by Mrs. Rosborn Young; the Good Boys' and the Good Girls' Library, and Walker's Tour in the Holy Land, by Rev. Robert Walker. This is a wide list of books intended for juveniles; but the works in other departments of literature, of which holiday editions have been issued, throw the former completely in the shade. The catalogue contains some of the best works in English literature, suitably for holiday gifts, elegantly bound in the most costly styles. A large number of set works, as the Schillers' Gallery, Biography of Albert Dürer, the Poet and the Painter, are splendid specimens of the art of printing. The Poems and Works of Robert Burns, illustrated from the Kilmarnock edition, form a superb gift-book. Less costly than this are the books composing the Popular Library of the Poets, which are attractively bound editions of the works of the best known English poets, from Milton down.

KNILLS & CO.

McMillan & Co. issue a well-filled gift-book catalogue, with specimen illustrations. Among these works, the humorous Tales of Tea-Time, by Mr. Knatchbull-Hugessen, occupy a prominent place. They are illustrated in a style fully corresponding to the text, by W. Brunton, and the book, being cheap as well as good, is sure to be popular. Through the Looking-Glass, and What Alice Found There, is another fanciffully written and illustrated book. Its illustrations are artistic and full of humor, and exceedingly well executed, as may be expected from the hand of Tenniel. Alice's Adventures in Wonderland is the companion volume to the above. In the Life of Sir Samuel Baker, by Lucy Martin, Metropolitan Bishop, the author of Mr. Livingstone's Journeys, has a story, the interest of which has proved quite popular, and very readable. It is well illustrated, and all these attractive books are [illegible] at very reasonable prices. A catalogue of this firm is the list of illustrated works, published as especially suitable for presents. To quote the titles of these will be sufficient to show their fitness for this: Raphael d'Urbino and His Father, translated from the twenty of the artist's most famous pictures reproduced by the permanent Woodbury process. *

FINANCIAL AFFAIRS.

TUESDAY, Dec. 17—P. M.

There was a sudden decline in the Gold sales this morning below 110 ¥ cent. The Bull speculators in the Gold Room seem to have become discouraged, or else they have temporarily surrendered a market which they recently said for some time controlled in order to direct a lower Rate of Interest. The nearly promised free supply from the Treasury for Interest on the Public Debt would, of itself, justify the depression of price, if we had not often seen the market go up on the actual payments of Gold Interest. The decline today contributed to the demand for Foreign Exchange, and the rates for 60 days' Bills are firm at 109¾@109¾ ¥ cent, which may be deemed comparatively high for the close of the Old Year. The sight rates are 110¼@110¾ ¥ cent, very close upon the Gold shipping points.

The Money rates to the Stock Brokers, to-day, are the very highest of the season since the first week in October. Through the forenoon, a sixteenth of one ¥ cent, and ¼ ¥ cent. Interest was freely paid to carry Stocks over the day, and near the close of Bank hours, one-eighth of one ¥ cent, and as much as three-sixteenths or one ¥ cent were paid on the Street corner (Exchange place and Broad-street), where lenders and borrowers "most do congregate." These enormous and extortionate shaves, as the terms referred to might be called, if a mere question of necessity, are freely paid, day in and day out, as a matter of business, familiar to Stock speculators, and on a calculation of profit when the heave Stocks, as they have done today, go up on the Exchange 1@2@3 ¥ cent in as many hours. In Mercantile circles there is no increased pressure for Money, through considerable help, not afforded by the Banks, is wanted to carry over engagements to the New Year. The rates for prime paper are 10@12 ¥ cent, per annum. These terms would, perhaps, be even higher, but for a demand for Domestic Commission and other paper from Boston, where Money is comparatively cheap and easy.

In the afternoon it transpired that further sales of first-class Bills on London had been made, as on yesterday, at 109 ¥ cent, which caused the market to close weaker than in the morning, at 109@109¼ ¥ cent. In this connection, and as explaining the special supply of Exchange, yesterday and today, amounting in the aggregate to the equivalent of two and a half millions dollars, we are at liberty to mention that negotiations which have now been pending for some time, having for their object the transfer to London of the control of the New-York, Newfoundland and London Telegraph Company, have been successfully completed through Messrs. J. S. Morgan & Co., of London, about three-quarters of the capital stock having been subscribed for in that market. These negotiations, we infer, account for the heavy transactions in 60 days' Bills on London, referred to in our report of yesterday, made by Messrs. Drexel, Morgan & Co., and which must have amounted to £600,000 sterling. The principal New-York recipients of this large sum are among the original and very enterprising projectors of the Newfoundland Cable, which broke down in 1858, and was relieved and again failed in 1865, and finally succeeded in August 1866. Their names do not all occur to us at present, but of the number are Cyrus W. Field, Peter Cooper, Moses Taylor, Marshall O. Roberts, Wilson G. Hunt, and Abram S. Hewitt.

It would be difficult to even attempt to explain the eccentricities of the Stock Exchange speculation on the Share list. There is not philosophy about it, that is certain, but some of the old operators of the Street, who are standing aloof from the excitement, claim that there are certain palpable and controlling reasons why the Bull element runs riot against dear Money and enormous additions to Railroad Capital and Debt, among which are the fears of the Bearish interest, so recently saddled on North-west and Pacific Mail, (before the decline,) to go short of the market. Another cause of buoyancy, in the face of what would under circumstances be deemed adverse in finances, is the jubilant spirit of the successful leading Bulls, inducing bolder operations for the advent of the New Year, when it is hoped Money will be cheaper, and the contagion of speculation wider spread. In the case of Pacific Mail, today, the sales opened at 76, its lowest 74 last night; they ran up to 78¼ ¥ cent before 11 o'clock, and subsequently fluctuated on very heavy sales between 78@76 ¥ cent. The extreme rise since Saturday is about 7 ¥ cent, and the course of prices on the other Stocks since have been in close correspondence, so far as the buying temper of the Exchange is concerned. Western Telegraph and nearly all the Railroads were on the advance today, and the prevailing activity spread over pretty nearly the whole list. At 4 o'clock P. M. the following quotations were finally made, as compared with Monday night. The Public Funds were duller and a fraction lower than yesterday, in sympathy with the decline in Gold. Virginia Bonds also fell off 1 ¥ cent. The Railroad Bonds generally steady.

BANKING AND FINANCIAL.

BANKING OFFICE OF FISK & HASKIN,
NEW-YORK, Dec. 16, 1872.

THE CHESAPEAKE AND OHIO RAILROAD is about completed. Its immediate revenues are very large; its earnings on the disconnected portions will reach this year nearly $1,000,000, without mineral or through business, from which the revenues of a completed road will be largely derived. Coal mining, iron furnaces, rolling mills and manufactories of all kinds will soon crowd its whole line; while the producing West and manufacturing East are eagerly awaiting the opening of the new Trunk Line, which is destined to have as important an influence upon the transportation of their products.

THE FIRST MORTGAGE SIX PER CENT. GOLD BONDS of the Company, the total amount of which is only $15,000,000, secured upon a property worth $60,000,000 to $40,000,000, and are fully equal in intrinsic value to the CENTRAL PACIFIC BONDS. They are issued in denominations of $100, $500, and $1,000, coupon or registered, and at their present market price, 88 and accrued interest, are very desirable.

THE CENTRAL PACIFIC SIX PER CENT. GOLD BONDS are too well known to require description or commendation. Their total amount is $25,885,000; they have for a long time ranked in market price near or above par—the price today being 103 to 103¼, with coupon on due Jan. 1, of 3 per cent. gold.

The WESTERN PACIFIC SIX PER CENT. GOLD BONDS amount to $2,726,000. This road is now consolidated with the CENTRAL PACIFIC, and the payment of its bonds, principal and interest, is assumed by them. Their market price today is 91 to 92, also with a 3 per cent. gold coupon on the January 1. As they have recently been introduced on the Stock Exchange, we expect to see them rapidly rise to the price of CENTRAL PACIFICS, being substantially the same in character and value.

The CHESAPEAKE and OHIO, the CENTRAL and WESTERN PACIFIC BONDS, all of which have been negotiated by us, we believe to be among the best and most desirable investment Securities in the market, which in time must become very scarce, especially as the Government will probably, during the coming year, pay off in gold another large lot of FIVE-TWENTIES, and issue in their place FIVE PER CENT. BONDS.

We buy and sell, as usual, Government Bonds, receive deposits, on which we allow interest, make collections, and conduct a general banking business at our branches.

FISK & HATCH.

BURLINGTON, CEDAR RAPIDS AND MINNESOTA RAILROAD FIRST MORTGAGE COUPON AND REGISTERED GOLD 7 PER CENT. BONDS, Coupon and Registered, yielding over nine per cent., for sale and recommended as an undoubted security and a safe and profitable investment, by HENRY CLEWS & CO., No. 32 Wall-st.

NEW-YORK MIDLAND.

Of the First Mortgage SEVEN PER CENT. GOLD LOAN of this Company there remains but a small amount unmarketed. When it is considered that this new Great Trunk line is now so nearly completed, we cannot avoid the conviction that these bonds, at $20,000 a mile, securedby a First Mortgage, are particularly desirable and safe. For sale or exchange for marketable securities by

GEO. OPDYKE & CO., Bankers,
No. 25 Nassau-st.

TO INVESTORS.

We are selling at par and interest, and recommend as careful investors, the Bonds of the Sioux City and St. Paul Railroad Company, of the Northern Pacific Railroad Company. Special attention is called to the ample Land security on which these bonds rest, in addition to the usual guarantee of a first mortgage on the Road, its equipments, and earnings. The lands of the Company are all within the Sioux City and St. Paul grant, averages about 22,000 acres per mile of road.

THE NEW-YORK TIMES.
New-York City.

There can be no doubt that Mr. DAVID DUDLEY FIELD palmed off upon the public a "speech" which he falsely said he had delivered before the Bar Association, and which was really the work of his leisure hours long after the meeting. The disgraceful character of the offense is shown in this—that Mr. DAVID DUDLEY FIELD introduced into his pretended speech a series of attacks upon his professional brethren which he never would have been allowed to make before the Bar Association; that he published shameless libels under the form of an address which the libeled persons were supposed to have heard; that he sat down in his own room and wrote these slanders, knowing well that the gentlemen whom he assailed would have no opportunity of replying to them, and that he afterward tried to give them the sanction of the Bar Association. This was at once a cowardly and a dishonest act—an act worthy of the man who deliberately instructed FISK and GOULD how to break the law without subjecting themselves to punishment. For such an act alone, FIELD ought to be expelled from the Bar Association; and, if they are not a very incompetent set of persons, they will expel him. Mr. FIELD may as well understand that this opinion is not suggested, written, or dictated by any lawyer whatsoever, but is one for which this journal is alone responsible.

In reference to Mr. FIELD's case, it may very properly be asked why the "leaders of the Bar" are so desperately afraid of him? Do they quake lest he should swallow them alive? The younger men of the profession have done their duty, but in reply to them, DAVID DUDLEY FIELD laboriously concocts libels in his closet, and fraudulently publishes them as a "speech." It looks to the unprofessional eye as if the members of the Bar Association were thoroughly afraid of FIELD, and especially that men like Mr. EVARTS would rather give him a wide berth than tackle him at close quarters. Is this so? Is Mr. EVARTS afraid to measure strength with FISK's counsel—we may almost say, FISK's confederate? Or do the lawyers expect newspaper editors to do all the work for them? We are poor, weak mortals, much given to err, and with our hands full of politics, murders, fires, swindlers, policy-dealers, and other trifles. Is it reasonable to ask us to purify the Bar? What a set of chicken-hearted persons the lawyers must be, to be afraid of sweeping out their own house!

Although the very reasonable request of the DAHLGREN family, that their claims shall be referred to proper inquiry, has been assented to by the Senate, the House seems disposed to inflict great hardship by continued delay. This time the case is "only" to be postponed till "after the holidays." Yet, if there is any justice in the case at all—as it is clear there is—it is difficult to understand why the intervention of Christmas should be necessary to enable the House to deal properly with it. Of all countries in the world, this is the one which gives the greatest encouragement to inventors—which offers every man a fair field for the exercise of his ingenuity. Yet it may happen that inventors fail to receive the due reward of their labors. Admiral DAHLGREN devised a weapon of warfare which proved remarkably successful, which was used in all the chief naval engagements of the war, and for which he was fairly entitled to some compensation. He never received a cent, and his widow now asks Congress simply to refer the case to a tribunal to decide whether or not he was entitled to compensation, and, if so, to what amount. She does not ask Congress to give her so much money, but merely to authorize an inquiry as to whether she is entitled to any money or not. Surely the House of Representatives will not refuse to accord her this small measure of justice. Procrastination is both undeserved and cruel, and we trust there will be an end of it, and that the House will follow the example of the Senate without further loss of time.

Mr. MANTON MARBLE—for in this way, it seems, he wishes to be spoken of, not as editor of the World—rolls the "veterans" to whom we alluded on Monday into one person, and gives him a name. Mr. "MANTALINI MARBLE," as the Herald used to call him, proceeds to make some remarks on the subject, characterized by the same mental aberration which was visible in a recent letter, written for the purpose of assuring the public that he was not dead—only "cracked," as the boys say. Perhaps Mr. MARBLE will now explain why, when Mr. ANDREW H. GREEN was appointed Controller, he (MARBLE) attacked his old friend and adviser, Mr. SAMUEL J. TILDEN, as a "railway politician and lawyer," who had formed a "sudden friendship for CONNOLLY!" Why, moreover, did he solemnly assert that Mr. GREEN was "an accomplice" to the Connolly frauds, and denounce his acceptance of office "as the most marvelous prostitution of a pure reputation that we (MARBLE) ever heard of." The same man defended CONNOLLY and HALL down to the last moment, supported the Code Amendments bill, suppressed the proofs of the Ring frauds, tricked the "Young Democracy," and hustled his own partners out of his business. A "smart man"—but this kind of smartness is not so popular as it was, when a house in Fifth-avenue could easily be secured by any man who was willing to take bribes.

The Secretary of the Children's Aid Society, Mr. C. L. BRACE, writes to us to say: "Last week a family of seven motherless children, who had been turned upon the street, were placed in comfortable rooms through the proceeds of the appeals made through the columns of the TIMES." Some hundreds of pairs of new shoes have been distributed among the poor children attending the schools. The good which is being accomplished with the money is very great, and we trust some of the contributors will make arrangements to attend one of the "Christmas festivals" announced in our news columns, and see for themselves the class of children they are invited to help, the character of the schools, and the nature of the work which is being done. Thus far we calculate that about $3,910 has been sent to Mr. BRACE in response to our solicitations for help, but we have requested him to make up the precise sum, in order that the public may know what progress is being made.

It may be safely assumed, from the proceedings in the House of Representatives yesterday, that the Credit Mobilier scandal is finally exploded. From first to last it has rested on the assertions of HENRY S. MCCOMB, and now Hon. JAMES BROOKS says in his place in the House that MCCOMB is a man without character, who is shown by the records of the War Department to be a "bandit and a robber," and Mr. BROOKS declares the whole Credit Mobilier story to be "a fiction, a figment of MCCOMB's villainous imagination." We regret that Mr. BROOKS did not tell us what he knew of MCCOMB's character when the scandal was being used for partisan purposes by the political party to which the member from New-York belongs. It would have been more to his credit to have vindicated the American Congress then, than to wait until it was necessary for him to speak in vindication of himself. But it is better to have the truth now than not at all.

Mr. BOUTWELL has explained to Congress the provisions of law under which he deems that he had the right to increase the volume of the currency in October last. He briefly states that his motive for doing so was to ease the money market. He holds that he has the same right with reference to the full amount of currency now withdrawn until the limit of four hundred millions of dollars is reached. We pointed out on the 8th of November the statutes on which this view of the Secretary might be justified. The matter now rests with Congress. The Secretary has avowed his view of the law, and his own policy. Will Congress leave him the enormous power he claims or not? That is a plain question, no longer surrounded by any uncertainty as to the consequences of inaction, and it must be answered.

What Shall We Do About Murder?

A sensible matron once told a friend, who was complaining of being overburdened with family cares, that her children were suffering for a little wholesome neglect. The converse is true of us in New-York, and it is at least a question whether we should not be the better for a little wholesome despotism. Passing by, for the moment, all other subjects, we come directly to that of life and death. We record about one murder a day in New-York proper; and nobody is punished, and indeed it seems difficult to have anybody tried. At this rate we shall have to enlarge the Tombs, unless we should prefer to take apartments for our murderers at the Steven's House or the Grand Central Hotel, taking great care that they should be lodged so that, in case of fire, they would not be in any danger; for to expose the life of a murderer to danger, or to put him to any serious inconvenience, would be a gross violation of decorum, and subject us to the charge of uncharitably prejudging his case. Now, it may suit our ward politicians, our criminal lawyers, some of the officers of our Courts, and all the rascals and the rabble of the town, that this sort of thing should go on for a dozen or so years longer, or, for that matter, forever; but, in the end, these persons and their like do never rule a civilized community; and we see and hear indications that this riot of blood will soon be stopped—if not in one way, in another.

When freedom has degenerated into license, and law becomes only a protector of criminals, despotism in some form is always called in to take the reins of government at the first moment of reaction. It comes like a tempest, but it does clear the air. It did so once in Cuba. Most of our readers have heard of TACON, many years ago Captain-General (as the authorities styled him) of that ever-turbulent island. He is execrated by many people as a tyrant, and in a certain sense he was tyrannical. His will was law, and he executed it with swift and implacable severity. But he was the man for the time and the place; and if not always wise and just, he was always magnanimous and thorough. He brought the island under civil rule, and, not the least important of his services, he gave to human life a protection which it entirely lacked there before he was placed in power. In Havana, men used to put to death those who had disobliged them with perfect impunity—not greater, to be sure, than obtains at present in New-York; but to all intents and purposes the freedom from consequences was absolute. There the defect in punishment took the form of inability to arrest, or even to discover, the criminal. This went on for awhile, notwithstanding the new Captain-General's severe animadversions upon the inefficient local authorities. At last, one morning about a dozen bodies were discovered in the streets, stabbed to death. In the course of the day TACON sent for the Chief of Police, who presented himself at the viceregal palace. "Where are the murderers of those men who were killed last evening? Have you arrested them?" "Where, Your Excellency? How should I know? I do not even know who they are. I have made inquiries, but have been able to discover nothing. Your Excellency will see that it is impossible that there should be any arrests." "I see no such thing," said TACON, rising in his wrath. "Look you here, Sir; find me the men who committed those murders before three days are over, or, on the fourth, I will garrote—you." "But, Your Excellency—" "Not a word; find them or take their place." The astounded functionary knew that words were unavailing, and left TACON's presence with the consciousness that he had but three days to save his own neck by quick and thorough work. At the expiration of the appointed time the required number of culprits was produced, and suffered the punishment of the garrote vil. It is whispered that there was not a positive certainty that all of these men were murderers on that particular occasion, but it was believed that all of them deserved their fate, if not for those crimes, for others. At any rate, from that day assassination began to diminish rapidly in Havana. Every man knew that detection in murder would certainly and swiftly be followed by the punishment of death; and every innocent man felt a lively interest in the question whether the real murderer, or some other person, perhaps himself, should be garroted. The consequence was that before long, life was safer in Havana than it is in New-York at this moment.

This was the work of a despot. But, as he showed, there are times when despotism is the best, because the last and only, cure of gigantic and firmly-rooted evil. Now, despotism does not always take the form of the execution of a single irresponsible will. There is nothing so despotic as the will of a mob; and its pitiless absoluteness is not diminished when it is organized into the form of a commune or a vigilance committee, and does its work with all the formality and the coolness of a Court or a high commission for the trial of a faithless king. Despotism of this sort ruled for a short time in San Francisco; and from that time order dwelt within the Golden Gates. The events of every day are bringing these facts to lively remembrance with many of our citizens, who do not belong to the class of ward politicians, or of their supporters, or those whom they support; and it is hinted that either TACON's example should be followed, and the official people held responsible, or the murderers themselves should be taken in hand. We record the fact only to accompany it with the expression of the earnest hope that justice will hereafter be so surely and so promptly done that no such disgrace and horror will fall upon our community.

Pledges to be Redeemed.

We have, as our readers are aware, waged a tolerably steady fight in favor of political honesty. We have sustained, against all comers, the position that the Republican Party was pre-eminently the party of reform, and that its pledges on this score, whether in respect of national, State, or municipal affairs, would unquestionably be redeemed. We have already been able to furnish ample proofs of the sincerity of the President's promises in regard to a higher ideal of administrative purity and ability, and there is no room to doubt that the Republican majority in the next Congress will fully justify the Reform platform on which it was elected. The time approaches when the pledges given by the Republican Party of this State and City must be redeemed. Before Nov. 5 we took some pains to impress the fact both upon honest Democrats and wavering Republicans, that our party platform meant exactly what it said, and that our party nominees would, if elected, carry out to the letter the pledges with which they individually seconded the principles professed by the Conventions which selected them.

It may not be unreasonable to recall, at the present juncture, what these principles and pledges were. The Republican State Convention, which met at Utica on Aug. 21, adopted resolutions, of which the following was one: "The welfare of the State imperatively requires that the reform, in the interest of honesty and economy, which was so auspiciously begun last year, and which has broken the Tammany Ring and purified the Bench, shall be continued and extended to every department of the Government." The Convention which adopted this resolution nominated Gen. DIX, an act in which, according to Hon. WM. A. WHEELER, President of the Convention, it "gave voice to the wishes of all men in the State, without regard to party, who desire a thorough reform and honest administration of our State affairs." To the official notification from which the above is quoted, Gen. DIX made a reply, in which he said: "Should it (the nomination) be ratified by the people, I shall enter upon my duties pledged to the utmost extent to the reform of abuses which dishonor the State, and which will inflict irretrievable injury on its character and prosperity, unless arrested by timely and efficient remedies."

The Republican County Convention held a meeting on Oct. 19, at which it expressly surrendered "personal and party views" in order to unite with the great body of nonpartisan reformers in nominating Mr. WILLIAM F. HAVEMEYER for Mayor. In conveying the official notification of that action, Mr. MURPHY, the chairman of the Convention, assured Mr. HAVEMEYER that the Convention was quite aware that he would not, "if elected, be the Mayor of the Republican Party," but that he had simply been selected as "the exponent of Reform." In accepting the nomination, Mr. HAVEMEYER took occasion to congratulate the Republican Party of the City upon its willingness "to subordinate its distinctive characteristics, and merge itself for the occasion with the patriotic citizens of all political sentiments, in efforts to elevate and purify our Municipal Government, and to remove from place and power those who had dishonored it." He pledged himself, if placed in the chair of the Mayoralty, "to give effect to these views, and to add to the material greatness and prosperity of our City the reputation of a just and honorable Government."

Whoever may be prepared to disregard these solemn pledges and emphatic professions of adhesion to the principles of nonpartisan Reform, it certainly is not the mass of the Republican Party, nor is it the men who headed their State and county tickets. Mr. HAVEMEYER has found frequent occasion to repeat, since the election, the declaration which he made before it; and, in a letter which we publish this morning, Gen. DIX makes the following fresh profession of faith in the great cause of Reform which he was elected to serve. He says, in reply to a number of leading citizens of both political parties, who express their confidence in his ability to restore the Government of this State "to the purity of its early days":

"I am in perfect accordance with you in regard to the popular expression at the late election in favor of a radical reform in the administration of the affairs of the State and its commercial capital. I consider it a verdict by the people against the corrupt and selfish management of political cliques, a condemnation of extravagance, fraud, and malfeasance in office, and public plunder, and a declaration in favor of retrenchment in expenditure, a strict accountability in executive departments, and a purification of the halls of legislation—the prolific sources of abuse. . . . So far as depends on me, these views will be faithfully and inflexibly carried out."

To those Republicans who think that nonpartisan reform in New-York is "a good enough Morgan until after the election," we may remark that their efforts to drag in the dirt the good name of a great party will probably end in leaving themselves soiled and prostrate, like their prototypes who helped TWEED in the Board of Supervisors, and elsewhere, to plunder the City.

Too Late.

There is an old story of a sea Captain who took on board an Irish pilot, and among other inquiries in reference to the channel, particularly asked him if he knew where all the rocks were. He was answered very confidently in the affirmative. A few minutes after, a thumping and scraping underneath announced that the keel had just touched a rock, the vessel barely escaping destruction. The loud and ringing voice of the vigilant pilot was instantaneously heard: "Captain, there's one of 'em now."

The official inspection of buildings after a fire has occurred is all very well. No reasonable man could have a word to say against it. We never heard that the Captain in question found fault with the pilot for mentioning that the rock was there. He may have been displeased. He may even have gone so far as to use violent and unbecoming language, for sea-faring men are not always as careful as they should be in the phraseology they employ. But if so, it was undoubtedly not because the needed information was given, but because it came somewhat too late. The analogy between this case and that of much of the inspection subsequent to fires would be still closer if the vessel had fairly struck the rock instead of grazing it. "There's one of 'em, now," we hear, whenever a destructive fire occurs; but, unhappily, the information thus communicated is too late to have any effect in preventing the disaster.

If the United States Government, instead of making coast surveys and taking soundings, should content itself with employing men, whenever a vessel runs a-ground or is wrecked, to see what made the trouble, such a course would scarcely show greater neglect of the safety of ships and mariners than the arrangements for inspecting buildings in New-York manifest in regard to the protection of life and property against fire. There are hundreds of structures now standing in this City which ought not to be allowed by the authorities to remain in their present condition a single hour longer than would be necessary to remove or alter them. But the authorities, apparently, give themselves no sort of concern about the matter. There is power enough in our Municipal Government, if not to afford all the protection needed, at least to give a great deal more than is even attempted. If more power is required, the Legislature ought to be petitioned to grant it. And here we would say a word about our insular position. In case of a fire stretching suddenly across Manhattan Island and then sweeping rapidly toward the Battery, what would become of the people south of where the conflagration originated? Where would they go? How would they get away? Could a sufficient number of steam-boats approach near enough to stop a fire to rescue them all? If not, the tragedy of the Fifth-avenue Hotel, fearful as it was, would be but a feeble illustration of a spectacle which the most distant parts of the civilized world would not cease for centuries to remember with horror.

There is no gender of the TIMES who will not bear witness that this journal has been [illegible] its efforts to call attention to the [illegible] New-York. But the conductors of a newspaper can only bring these things before the public. They have no means of controlling action, either on the part of officials or private individuals. The people, as well as the Press, have a duty in this matter. It is in the power of the citizens to see that measures are taken to mitigate some, at least, of the dangers to which the City is exposed, or, at all events, emphatically to demand that something shall be done for this purpose by the authorities. We do not believe that such a demand would be entirely unheeded. Indifferent as our City Government has been in many respects to the welfare of the community, we can hardly imagine that an appeal appropriate to the importance of this subject would be altogether disregarded. At any rate, let the people, and especially the property-holders and business men, see to it that no negligence on their part shall contribute to the continuance of these dangers.

A Great Want in Financial Legislation.

In examining the recent reports of the Departments at Washington, the practical inquirer and the legislator will feel one great want. There is no solid and scientific basis on which to proceed in reforming our financial legislation. The President is probably correct in his statement that we cannot afford just yet to reduce materially our taxation, if we carry out the wise plan of lessening the debt each year, as well as of paying interest and current expenses. Though even in this view, we must bear in mind what economists call "the elasticity" of our revenue—that is, the continual growth of income from increased population and advancing wealth. Every year our gross income exceeds the estimates, and we believe that this alone will justify in the future some further reductions of taxation. But supposing that during the coming year, no material lessening of our taxes would be wise, there is still the great question, "Have we a wisely-adjusted scale of taxation?"

A tax may yield a good income to the Government, and yet may so hamper production in other quarters, or so increase indirectly the burdens of consumers, as really to cost the country more than it brings. There is evidently something weighing on the production of the nation. The West feels poor—and the West is our great producing section in the agricultural field. The business community of this City and other large Eastern cities are cramped and not doing their usual business. Retail trade is much more dull than is customary at this season. Real estate, except in certain speculative places, is low and inactive. There is much complaint among the laboring classes of want of employment; meat and flour are high; the expenses of a household are beyond any reasonable limit. We appeal to all small householders who used to find two thousand dollars a good income, how very little way such a sum will go now, where there is a family to support. There is an unusual struggle to live. Expenses are high, and all branches of work crowded. Considering the astonishingly favorable circumstances of this nation, its soil, cheap land, the invaluable supplies of labor pouring in, the inventive brain of the people, and the freedom of the individual, there is no question that we do not present, at this time, the condition of prosperity in the United States which we ought. It is now a bad country to buy in, and a poor one to sell products. There is evidently, somewhere, a weight lying on both producers and consumers. We used to compete with the world in a thousand products of loom, factory, and field; now we have, besides raw products, hardly more than one invention of ingenuity with which we can supply Europe—and that is the sewing-machine.

The question for the legislator and the scientific investigator is, "Where is the weight on our production?" And nothing in the reports of the Departments can answer this question. A few years ago we had, for a brief period, an official whose business it was to show to Congress and the nation what the exact internal condition of our industries was. As the Commissioner of the Internal Revenue, it was his duty to ascertain what were the profits of, and the burdens upon, each branch of manufacture; why one had succeeded and another was failing; what precise rate of tax aided one industry or killed another; what was the influence of high protective duties, and what of low revenue taxes; why we could not produce this or export that product. It is safe to say that no wiser or more scientific department was ever founded by any nation, to furnish a solid basis for legislation. The reports became models of economical research. They were sought for by the economists of all countries. Mr. WELLS himself became an authority. Under them, Congress and the people had a sound basis of facts on which to build its financial reform.

It is true, Congress treated them with profound contempt. Still a few members who think, and thousands of those through the country who guide public opinion, studied them carefully. Without them, neither Congress nor the people have any clue to the financial labyrinth. The action of taxes is exceedingly complicated and difficult to understand. Thus, who would ever have suspected that a high duty on foreign wools would have prostrated both our coarse-wool production and the wool manufacture? So with many other duties. Their action is intervolved, delicate, incomprehensible, except on close study. At this time we are absolutely without guide, or clue in this difficult field. Congress would like to rearrange the scale of taxation; to relieve some industries, and perhaps burden others; to lighten the heavy load lying on the back of the people; but no one knows how to begin scientifically. If taxes are reduced or increased, the work will be done in the dark. It will be a hap-hazard financial legislation. The first requisite in finance is to know the figures with which we deal. The proper course would be for Congress to appoint a committee to make this investigation, giving [illegible] to enable them to [illegible]

MINOR TOPICS.

Whenever a "change" is talked of in any newspaper office, the correspondent of another paper immediately set to work revealing all sorts of cock-and-bull stories about the New-York papers, generally giving them a new deal of editors all round. Some of the correspondents are sensible men—the "balance," to borrow one of their own words, consists of persons who take to "literature" because street-sweeping seems not easy. We invite the rural—our esteemed "professional brethren"—to confine their agreeable inventions to the fireside. The other "changes" they talk of exist only in their rum-heated brains; and, as a general rule, it is quite safe to regard their statements concerning our business affairs, of which they are supremely ignorant, as mere Bohemian lies. There are no changes probable in this office, where affairs go on to the entire satisfaction of everybody except our enemies.

In the course of a very good article, yesterday, the Brooklyn Eagle says: "A paragraph printed in New-York and telegraphed to Ulysses drove Judge Hoadley out of the task for Governor." The paragraph thus referred to appeared in the TIMES, and is by the Eagle attributed to Mr. THURLOW WEED. It is only right to say that Mr. WEED had no more to do with it than the editor of the Brooklyn Eagle, or the man in the moon; that we held or received no communication from Mr. WEED on the question; that Mr. WEED does not favor us with his advice, or instructions on any subject. Finally, that the conductors of this journal have seldom or ever seen or heard from him for years past. Mr. WEED has enough to answer for without being held responsible for all that we choose to say or do.

All that STOKES can ask today is a fair and impartial trial. There should be no use of the money of FISK to secure conviction, and no clamor of FISK's friends to insure that result. Nor should FISK's notorious character incline the Court or the jury to look with leniency upon the facts, if proved, do not warrant upon the act charged upon STOKES. The highest prosecuting officer of the County should conduct the trial, for to do this kind of work he was elected. There can, therefore, be no foundation for the suggestion which is afloat, that FELLOWS, a discreditable person, is to lead in the case. Manifestly he should not do it; for, did he not bend over the coffin of FISK, with his face suffused with tears, and exclaim, "Good by, dear boy, good by! You was always a true and steadfast friend to me." One whose relations with FISK were such as to justify such language on such an occasion, is hardly a proper person to conduct the trial of FISK's alleged murderer.

Recorder HACKETT again merits the thanks of the community. One JOHN MCMULLIN was tried before him yesterday for highway robbery. The evidence was positive that on the night of the 27th of November last the prisoner, with two confederates, waylaid the complainant in a public street, and after the prisoner had rendered his victim insensible by striking him on the head with some weapon, the three men rifled his pockets. There being further evidence identifying the prisoner as the one who struck the blow, the jury promptly brought in a verdict of guilty, and the Recorder at once sentenced the culprit to twenty years in the State Prison, at hard labor. This prompt conviction and justly severe sentence will have a restraining influence upon our outlaws, which the history of every day proves to be greatly needed. If equally rigorous punishment were to follow as quickly upon all our crimes, New-York would soon become one of the most orderly of cities.

It would be interesting to know who are the people who continually leave seal-skin jackets and valuable overcoats in theatres and railway cars. It seems to the ordinary mind quite impossible for a person to leave a theatre and go into the cold night air unconscious of having left a heavy and cumbrous article of daily wear behind him. Neither is it conceivable that a sane person should throw jackets and overcoats and shawls about the streets, or abandon them in the railway car and the omnibus. Yet there are people who do this sort of thing, and subsequently advertise their stupidity and their loss in the daily papers. Unless, indeed, we suppose that the advertisers are really laboring under a mental hallucination, and thus fancy that they have lost articles which they never possessed. This theory certainly has a degree of plausibility. If so many seal-skin jackets are lost as the advertisers would have us believe, some one must find them. Now no man can say that he ever found anything of the sort, and how then are we to believe that they are daily and nightly strewn about in all directions and in every place of amusement.

Another conductor has become a victim of the lawlessness which infests our street-cars at night. It was only a short time since that CHARLES COLBY, of the Dry Dock and Grand-street line, was beaten nearly to death by some thieves whom he had expelled from his passengers; and now NATHAN RAYMOND, of the Eighth-avenue line, has been thrown from his car and severely injured by a drunken ruffian, who committed the outrage without having had the slightest provocation. It is evident that something must be done to rid our street-cars of these outlaws. It is becoming almost impossible to enter a late night car on some of the chief lines, without enduring insults, and taking the risk of deadly assaults from the drunken brutes that are generally found in them. The companies must devise some way to get rid of these dangerous customers, or their night cars will become entirely useless to the general public.

It is somewhat singular that Fire-Marshal MCSPEDON announced his deductions from his investigation into the origin and incidents of the Fifth-avenue Hotel disaster before he had concluded the taking of the testimony. It would have been more sensible upon his part to have secured all attainable facts before announcing his conclusions, and it is fortunate for him that the evidence taken after the announcement of his opinion does not in any way disturb it. It will be seen, from a review of all the evidence thus far taken, that there is nothing in the facts to justify the charge of culpable negligence against any of those engaged in the house. Unlike some who happened to be there at the time of the disaster, those in charge of the hotel did not lose self-control, but intelligently used every possible expedient both to stay the fire and rescue those in peril. The testimony of the firemen of the hotel is especially valuable upon the latter point, which has been chiefly in dispute.

THE POOR CHILDREN.

Holiday Festivals for the Little Waifs.

To the Editor of the New-York Times:

CHILDREN'S AID SOCIETY,
No. 15 EAST FOURTH-STREET,
NEW-YORK, Dec. 17, 1872.

Your readers who have been kindly and generously contributed to the enjoyment of the poor children in the Christmas Holidays, will be glad to see some of their enjoyments and to note how many benighted little ones have been shod and naked clothed and hungry fed. A list of the Christmas festivals is appended, and all who desire are invited to attend. Yours very truly,

C. L. BRACE, Secretary.

RIVINGTON-STREET LODGING-HOUSE AND INDUSTRIAL SCHOOLS, No. 237 RIVINGTON-STREET, Dec. 17, 1872.

To the Editor of the New-York Times:

Allow me, in behalf of the poor children of this institution, to thank you very cordially for the great interest you have taken in them and the benefits you have been the means of conferring upon them. We tender our grateful thanks also to the readers of the TIMES, who have responded so generously to your touching appeal.

We received from Mr. BRACE, several days ago, an order to give the Industrial School-children hot dinners, and to provide warm under-clothing for the poor "street boys." A fund has been established here exclusively for providing medical attendance, medicine, and nourishment for sick poor children on a plan similar to the "TIMES Relief Fund," and several interesting cases have already been relieved. One case may be given here to illustrate the nature of the work. A little boy called here several nights ago, and asked for a bed. He said he was an orphan, had no friends, and used to blacken boots for a living. "But," said he, "I can't blacken now; my arm was broken six weeks ago; the doctor did not fix it right, and I shall never be able to use it; I can only beg," and as he said this, the tears flowed freely down his cheeks, and he held up his right arm, a helpless, crooked specimen of malpractice and neglect. We took charge of the poor fellow; where fractured limb is now properly set, and he will soon be able to earn a livelihood. A poor German woman really seem more bright and cheerful already. They have now something to live for and look forward to, and though that is only "a good hot dinner," God help them! it is an unestimable boon to them, and we hope they shall not have to go without it, nor clothing and shoes, at least, until the Summer sunshine warms their dreary homes and the pavement under their little feet. Very respectfully,

GEORGE CALDER, Superintendent.

THE GOVERNOR ELECT.

The following [illegible] has been forwarded to us for publication:

NEW-YORK, Dec. 10, 1872.

Hon. John A. Dix.

DEAR SIR: The new approach of the time when you will leave this City to enter upon your responsible duties as Governor of this State, induces us to ask of you the honor of meeting us at a public dinner to be given on any day which may be agreeable to you.

We desire to avail ourselves of the occasion to express our entire confidence that your administration of the affairs of this State, as its executive head, will be characterized by economy and efficiency in every department of the Government under your control; that, appreciating the emphatic expression of the people's will for a thorough reform in legislation, you will encourage and promote, by all the means in your power, the enactment of such laws as will protect and secure the just rights of all classes of our citizens, and thus restore the Government of this State to the purity of its early days.

A long and unsullied life, so large a part of which has been spent in the acceptable performance of high public trusts, is a guarantee that you will exhibit, in the distinguished position to which you have been elevated by a large majority of your fellow-citizens, the same sterling virtues which have been evinced in your discharge of all official duties.

We are, dear Sir,
Very respectfully yours,

John C. Green,	Alex. T. Stewart,
Royal Phelps,	W. F. Havemeyer,
John J. Cisco,	Edwin D. Morgan,
John J. Astor,	Henry Nicoll,
John A. Stewart,	James M. Brown,
John D. Jones,	Henry O. Marquand,
Edwards Pierrepont,	J. D. Vermilye,
Robert L. Cassidy,	J. Pierpont Morgan,
Charles Partridge,	R. B. Minturn,
Charles H. Russell,	Wm. E. Dodge,
George Cabot Ward,	Jonathan Sturges,
Samuel D. Babcock,	Robert L. Stuart,
Wm. H. Macy,	Alex. Stuart,
William B. Astor,

No. 5 WEST TWENTY-SIXTH STREET, Dec. 14, 1872.

GENTLEMEN: I have had the honor to receive your favor of the 10th inst., inviting me to meet you at a public dinner.

For this kind invitation, and for the flattering expressions of confidence and friendly regard with which it is accompanied, I beg you to accept my most sincere thanks.

My departure at an early day to take up my residence in Albany, and my urgent engagements in the meantime in arranging my private affairs here, compel me to decline the honor you have tendered me.

I am in perfect accordance with you in regard to the popular expression at the late election in favor of a radical reform in the administration of the affairs of the State and its commercial capital. I consider it a verdict by the people against the corrupt and selfish management of political cliques, a condemnation of extravagance, fraud, malfeasance in office, and public plunder, and a declaration in favor of retrenchment in expenditure, a strict accountability in executive departments, and a purification of the halls of legislation, the prolific sources of abuse. To the accomplishment of these objects I am committed by views announced years ago, widely circulated during the late political canvass, and ratified, as I conceive, by an overwhelming majority of the people. So far as depends on me, these views will be faithfully and inflexibly carried out. It may be necessary for the Legislature, in extirpating the diseased parts of the body politic, to resort to sharp remedial processes, but I trust these processes will be performed with an unflinching hand, and, in so doing, the representatives of the people who have been chosen to execute their will may rely on my most cordial co-operation.

Renewing the expression of my most grateful acknowledgment of the honor you have done me, I am, gentlemen, respectfully and truly yours, JOHN A. DIX.

Messrs. William B. Astor, Alex. T. Stewart, William F. Havemeyer, E. D. Morgan, and others.

AMUSEMENTS.

Theatrical.

Spanish comedy of the bustling, intriguing stamp does not seem to become obsolete, or to pall on current taste, as rapidly as old comedy of other kinds. Whether from the number of the characters, the vivacity of the dialogue, the picturesque costume, the fact that each of these plays contained half a dozen love stories, or, as is most probable, because of all these things together, "The Wonder" and the "Bold Stroke for a Husband" always create plentiful laughter and amusement, and really could hardly have been more liked than when first seen at the old Patent Theatres in London. The odd fact that both these somewhat highly-colored pieces are the work of women may have something to do with their perennial charm. When ladies will write at all they commonly treat the intricacies of the great passion with a masterly hand; and the way in which the men are made tools and puppets of by their clever antagonists in these comedies might provoke the idea from the masculine public, were they not kept so generally in good humor by the rattling farce and joyous whim of the situations.

Few pieces have been so well acted of the Fifth Avenue as was last evening the "Bold Stroke for a Husband." It might be supposed, since none of the artists who appeared in the modern comedy of "Married Life" on Monday acted in the play of Tuesday, that the cast of the latter might have been weakened for the sake of a trivial bit of effect. Such, however, was not the case. Mrs. Dowlev's work was very well dealt with on all sides. We have never seen Miss Fanny Davenport, in legitimate business, to such good advantage as in Donna Olivia. The part is textually "local," rather than "general," comedy, and the bits of mimicry, the suppressed fun, and the never-ending plot and counterplot are entered into by Miss Davenport with abundant heartiness and merriment. Miss Clara Morris is good in Donna Victoria, and Miss Kate Claxton is all that, and the Rosario in Donna Marcella. Miss Mary Cary played Menalio as well as to be called out with enthusiasm at the end of her capital scene in the fourth act. In Don Julio, Mr. George Clarke is frisky and volable without being offensive; Mr. Griffiths enters admirably into the grotesque humor of Don Cheay; a gentlemanly and diverting Don Vincentio is supplied by Mr. Owen Fawcett; and the junior characters had at least respectable attention. The comedy was beautifully dressed, and some of the scenes were very pretty pictures indeed. But for the curtain being once or twice kept down too long between the acts, there would have been nothing whatever to mar the enjoyment of the evening.

It is impossible to see a creditable performance of such a comedy as the "Bold Stroke for a Husband" without wishing that modern writers would more frequently resort to such something of the briskness and rapidity of their dialogue, and the full and artistic use of their characters, while avoiding their occasional license and superfluous grossness. A play that "goes" as this did last night with a continuous succession of well supported and bitterly laughable scenes, must have cost us, if, and that of a very useful and telling sort. Mrs. Cowley's comedy is to be acted again on this Wednesday and Saturday nights, and those who like to enjoy a highly diverting treatment of an extremely amusing and [illegible] drama will get no disappointed if they go to see it. To-night "Marriage" is to be repeated.

A new burlesque entertainment, adapted and [illegible] entitled "The Black Crook," was produced at this theatre last Monday evening. The principal characters in the piece are represented by Miss Pauline Markham, Miss Lisa Weber, Miss Emma Grattan, Miss Belle Howitt, and Messrs. Atkins, Sheldon, Mestayer, and Lewis. Incidental to the play are a number of songs and dances by Mesdrs. Delhantyand Hengler, and Sherman and Mackenzie, and Mr. Jacob Showles introduces his trick mules, "Pete and Barney." Of the extravagance itself we need only say that the parts of the two babes are filled by Master Stallion and Master Hall, and the role of the Earl and Marquess is assumed by Miss Weber, and that Maid Marian has a full representative in Miss Markham. The dresses are good and beautiful, and the scenery and music good. At the matinées the fairy comedy of "The Palace of Truth" will be given throughout the week.

RICH AND RARE JEWELS.

A Visit to the Store of Starr & Marcus.

What is to be Seen Therein.

To the lover of all that is beautiful and valuable in art, a visit to the warerooms of Starr & Marcus, at No. 25 John-street, (Maiden-lane,) is something to be long remembered, for there can be found specimens of the lapidary's skill to be seen, probably, nowhere else in the country. We have had an opportunity of examining their stock of precious stones and rich jewelry, until the sense of sight was bewildered, for the specimens were true artists in their mode of exhibiting the goods. Passing by the splendid assortment of silverware contained in large cases in the first room of the establishment, we have shown into the jewelry department. It would be useless to describe all that was exhibited, for the repetition would only be tiresome. There were richly-cut cameos in endless variety, in rings, buttons, lockets, pins, pendants, and bracelets, all magnificently mounted in artistic and artistic style. This line of goods was a study in itself, while the rarer specimens were perfect gems. A fabulous resemblance of one here the portrait of Ann of Austria, boldly yet exquisitely cut, each line being seven more beautiful under the glass than at first appeared to the naked eye. The rarest of onyx gems, which bore the figure of the Holy Mother, delicately carved in exquisitely-soft outlines, was also among the treasures of this department. A large pendant, "The Aurora," was magnificently set with diamonds, and is intended for the Vienna Exposition. "Hector's Farewell" was the subject of another cameo, the artist being in yellow, green, and red gold, the whole ornament being classic in its outlines. But the most beautiful specimen of all was that of a chalcedony stone, milky white in the centre, with a transparent onyx on its edge, the whole forming the face of another on the opposite of a Madonna, the two heads being here reliefs on a white background. This wonderful work of art will be richly set with diamonds as a pendant, with a swivel attachment, so that the faces can be changed at pleasure. A costly bead is also on show, so arranged as to be worn as a necklace, bracelet, or pendant. This jewel alone is worth a visit. A pair of naturally-curved onyx cameos, for bracelets, were beautiful, though yet unmounted. Besides, there are rare diamonds, and yet rarer sapphires, emeralds, and pearls by the number and number. It is in these precious stones that Messrs. Starr & Marcus have made their reputation, and having devoted years to the business of collecting such jewels, how full themselves in possession of a stock unequaled in America. The "old mine diamonds," now so valuable because the India and Brazilian mines have stopped working, are a leading feature with the firm, and we were shown some marvelous assortments. A cross, containing eleven matched stones, the product of nearly 200 specimens, was shown, and proved to be a matchless jewel. The Lapidarian Department, a new feature, affords some beautiful specimens of jewelry, as they are not only novel, but surprising. A glance at the cases revealed a charming variety of goods. Rich paintings in miniature, rare and unique stones, pearls, diamonds, cameos, and other jewels were visible as rings, cardrops, pins, or bracelets, while the diversity of style was confusing. A pair of "Japanese" bracelets, made entirely of yellow, green, and red gold, was among the novelties, being in exquisite taste. Then there were watches by Jurgensen, Matile, Vocheron, and other celebrated makers, got up in every possible style. The array of ladies' watches was a very fine one, some of the articles being wonders in the way of workmanship. One would scarcely imagine, on reaching the nearest doorway leading up to the rooms of Starr & Marcus, that so much beauty and wealth was to be seen within. At present the sales of the firm are very large, as it is the holiday time, and as every article is sold for just what it is, their customers always know what they are getting for their money.

The New-York Rural Club.

The New-York Rural Club held their Winter meeting and dinner at Delmonico's, Fifth-avenue and Fourteenth-street, last evening. Speeches in response to toasts were made by Mr. B. B. Kelm, of Kansas, Col. Dickenson, Mr. W. D. Hurlburt, and others. The table was elegantly ornamented with flowers by Mr. C. L. Allen, of Queens, Long Island, one of the members. Ex-Mayor A. Oakey Hall presided, and Mr. A. B. Crandell acted as Secretary. A number of ladies were present, and the greatest pleasure seemed to prevail. This is the only Club in the City which admits ladies to its dinners.

Juliet in the Tombs.

Among the visitors at the Tombs yesterday, was Miss Yelloun, who in the course of her realistic studies has processed so far as the gloomy pile in Centre-street. She was accompanied by Mr. Magonigle, of Booth's Theatre, and after a thorough inspection of the edifice and its most interesting features, departed, expressing great interest in what she had seen.

I HAVE LONG KNOWN THE VIRTUES of Dr. Jayne's Expectorant, and frequently tested them on myself and family, when afflicted with Coughs or Colds. I believe it to be one of the best remedies ever discovered for these maladies.

I am about to sail in a week or two, on a voyage to Europe, and should as soon think of exposing myself to the chilling skies of England without an overcoat, as without a supply of Jayne's Expectorant.—Rev. Dr. DOWLING, formerly pastor of Berean Baptist Church, New-York.—World.

Messrs. Herring & Co., Chicago:

GENTLEMEN: We had one of your safes in use at the fire of Saginaw. It emerged from you about four years ago. It recently went through a very big fire in this place, and saved my books and papers all very well. In opening it we were obliged to blow in and break the door. I think, if you can, you ought to get a new header. Yours, truly,

J. CLARKE.

WACO, Texas, Nov. 20, 1872.

Messrs. Herrings & Farrel:

GENTLEMEN: On the morning of the 6th of March, 1871, our store was entirely destroyed by fire. We had in the safe of your celebrated Champion Fire Proof, purchased of Messrs. Herring & Farrel, New-York, containing the iron and nothing the books, manuscripts, &c., and yet, on opening it, we were surprised to find all our books, papers, &c., in a perfect state of preservation. MISCELLANEOUS.

A PLAIN STATEMENT OF FACTS.

A Choice for Consumptives.—Do not wait or die. What must be done, and how to do it.—This course will be pursued or death will follow.—Dr. Schenck's Course of Treatment laid down to cure bad cases of Consumption.

While other medicines are being tried, and failed, I will tell you what I consider to be really worthy of your attention. Their effect is too certain to require any comment, but previous to which, usually results the complication of diseases which puzzles the public. The symptoms will answer and follow the directions which accompany each bottle, consumptives may be and will be cured, and often when it is apparently in its last stage.

I do not wish to be understood to say that other remedies are destroyed, any medicine can make them, but I do mean to say that when a patient has a Vitalized Condition of the Blood, creeping chills, fever, night sweats, cough, and given up to die by the physicians, a cure may be effected.

Let me ask the most common medical men are greatly mistaken in supposing, or in the opinion, that Consumption of Pulmonary Consumption.

Now, I will venture to say that two-thirds of the cases of consumption in the United States are caused by Dyspepsia or Liver Complaint. The mucous membrane of the Mouth, Throat, and Lungs, sympathizes with the liver and stomach, and frequent slight colds finished in the breast, and the Pulmonary Consumption.

The PULMONIC SYRUP is the best remedy known to ripen and expel all the impure matter from the lungs, and surpasses all other medicines in curing a cough and all other pulmonary disorders. The SEA-WEED TONIC is to be taken regularly, and regularly, three times a day, half an hour before food, commencing in the morning in the Sea-Weed Tonic, and continue it without the SEA-WEED TONIC, and cause short after it is eaten; add that blood is made out of cooked food. It is only in dyspeptic or consumptives that the SEA-WEED TONIC is used, that is, people every one, for it will digest a heavy dinner. It regulates the liver, gives the stomach a healthy tone, and is the best appetite and digestion, and strength and flesh to the body and system. It is the most agreeable stimulant, but its stimulating properties are as lasting as the wine. The MANDRAKE PILLS act on the liver, causing a healthy flow of healthy bile, and the MANDRAKE PILLS is the only remedy that will regulate the liver without salivating. The MANDRAKE PILLS are the only remedy that will regulate the liver and stomach, and cause healthy action, and are that is may prevent from its use.

Should the bowels become costive, the Intermittent and Aperient Pills should be used. The Intermittent and Aperient Pills are to be used, the liver must be acted on freely with the MANDRAKE PILLS. Frequently in diarrhoea it is proper to take the Pills, and the liver is in a state of dullness, or the system is disordered, the use of a dose or two at the same time, the same day; and every person, with a little judgment, would use his own body, can be cured without a doctor. Salivation is not necessary, nor is it desirable, nor is it to come and be examined with the mercurial, which indicates disease, and then they will know of the true condition of the Pills and TONIC; the Pills and TONIC will cure, and cut out, nothing food; nature will soon repair the damage done the disease, and the patient will become fat and healthy. When these medicines are not thoroughly and enough dry, they are not near as liable to take cold, yet great care should be taken, if M. H. Dr. Other Medicines, I prefer to very dangerous.

Years ago I was given up as being in the last stages of Consumption, and was taken from home to Philadelphia to my friends in Moorestown, N. J., to die. I was soon taken down to my bed, and lay there many weeks, dreaming of dying and leaving them. I heard of and obtained these preparations of roots and herbs, which, to the astonishment of everybody, wrought a great change in my system for the better. I was able to go out in a few days, and in a few days was able to walk a mile, and in my hunger, and I would spit off more than a pint of offensive yellow matter, every morning. My appetite was nearly gone, I ate but a few ounces of food at a time. I was with difficulty I could restrain from eating too much, my cough, fever, pain, and night sweats all began to leave me; I gained in strength, and have been increasing in flesh ever since. My friends, relatives, family, my father, mother, brothers, and sisters all died of consumption.

Now I enjoy the best of health, and have for years, weighing over two hundred and twenty pounds. In consideration of my recovery I turned my attention to the science of medicine, and the study of this particular disease. In fact, I was driven to it by the great number of people coming to me for advice, from all parts to cure them, and I flatter myself that at this day I have as much experience and success in the treatment of this disease as any other person in the country.

Full directions for taking my medicines accompany them in several languages, so that a person in any part of the world can be readily cured by a strict observance of the same.

NEW-YORK CITY NEWS.

PROF. TYNDALL'S LECTURE.

The great English electrician lectured last night at Cooper Institute to an audience that truly represented the science, the culture, and the refinement of New-York. The enormous hall, which has been so often filled with excited crowds of citizens brought there by some great political event, was, on this occasion, equally crowded. More than half the persons present were ladies, who throughout the lecture evinced the keenest interest. The lecturer made his appearance punctually at 8 o'clock, and was introduced to the immense audience by one of the trustees, who made a neat little speech, in which he spoke of the Professor's universal reputation and the delight which his efforts to popularize science had created in America, where his works, reprinted by Messrs. Appleton, had obtained an immense circulation. The Professor then advanced to the front of the platform, and was received with a long burst of hand-clapping, which seemed to please him mightily. Behind him was a white canvas, and in front of him, built out from the stage, was an electric lantern. On the rostrum was a small electric battery. With these implements, during his lecture, he gave us almost continuous series of experiments, some of them well known, others quite novel, but all beautiful, and demonstrating his arguments with absolute force. The gist of his address was in these. The TIMES feels that the effort to reproduce a lecture which appealed as much to the eye as to the intellect must be lame indeed. Knowing the general desire, however, to read his lecture, it gives as much as could be taken by the pen, hoping its readers to comprehend the reason why the report is so utterly inadequate to convey an impression of the Professor's first lecture on light. He spoke as follows:

LADIES AND GENTLEMEN: Some twelve years ago I published in England a little book entitled the Glaciers of the Alps, and a couple of years subsequently, a second volume, entitled Heat as a Mode of Motion, and from these occurrences I may date the commencement of those friendly relations with the people of the United States which have brought me here to-night. The two volumes referred to were followed by others, written with the same object, which was to establish a broader and deeper sympathy than that previously existing between science and the world outside of science. I did not think it good for either of them to be isolated from the other, or, anagrammatically speaking, each, and so between their pleasures I swerved for a time, aside from these original inquiries which had previously been the pursuit and pleasure of my life, and tried without failing into superficiality to render a portion of the talk of science plain to all intelligent minds.

Nearly the whole of these books were republished in this country, under the auspices of a man who is untiring in his efforts to diffuse sound scientific knowledge among the people of the United States; whose energy, ability, and single-mindedness, in the prosecution of an arduous task, have won for him the sympathy and of us in England, I believe, I allude to Prof. Youmans, of this City. Quite as rapidly as in England, the aim of these works was understood and appreciated in the United States, and they brought to me from the side of the Atlantic innumerable proofs of good-will. Among these are to be reckoned the invitations I received to lecture in American cities, accompanied by assurances of hearty welcome.

In answer to my inquiries in England, I had been given to understand that you would probably prefer experimental lectures on the subject of light. This was difficult; but I resolved to meet it, by bringhe to Scotland a transport of the apparatus suitable for such lectures. I think it best to begin with the few simple facts regarding light which were known to the ancients, and to pass on from them in historic gradation to the more abstruse discoveries of modern science.

The motions of the stars first attracted the attention of the ancient world. Light also was a familiar phenomenon, and from the earliest times we find men's minds busy with the attempt to render some account of it. But without experiment, which belongs to a later stage of scientific development, no progress could be made in this subject. The ancients accordingly were far less successful in dealing with light than with solar and stellar motions. Still they did make a little progress. They satisfied themselves that light moved in straight lines; they knew also that these lines or rays of light were reflected from polished surfaces, and that the angle of incidence was equal to the angle of reflection. These two results of ancient scientific curiosity constitute the starting point of our present course of inquiry.

Both of these are capable of the easiest experimental illustration, but, in the first place, it may be useful to say a few words regarding the source of light to be employed in our experiments. The melting of iron is, to all intents and purposes, the slow burning of iron. It develops heat, and, if the heat be preserved, a high temperature may be thus attained. The destruction of the first Atlantic cable was probably due to heat developed in this way. Other metals are still more combustible than iron. You may light strips of tine in a candle flame and cause them to burn almost like strips of paper. But besides these combustible metals, the list we may also have combustion in a liquid. Water, for example, contains stores of oxygen, which may unite with and thus consume, a metal immersed in it. It is from this kind of combustion that we are to derive the heat and light employed in the present course.

Their generation merits a moment's attention. Before you is an instrument—a small voltaic battery—in which zinc is immersed in a suitable liquid. Matters are so arranged that a strain is set up between the metal and the oxygen, actual union, however, being avoided. Until the action of the battery by a thick wire, the attraction is satisfied, the oxygen unites with the metal, the zinc is consumed, and heat, as usual, is the result of the combustion. A power which, for want of a better name, we call an electric current, passes at the same time through the wire.

Cutting the thick wire in two, I unite the several ends by a thin one. It glows with a white heat. Whence comes that heat? The question is well worthy of an answer. Suppose, in the first instance, when the thick wire was employed, that we had permitted the action to continue till one hundred grains of zinc were consumed, the amount of heat generated in the battery would be capable of accurate numerical expression. Let the action now continue with the thin wire glowing until one hundred grains of zinc are consumed. Would the amount of heat generated in the battery be the same as before? No, it would be less by the precise amount generated in the thin wire outside the battery. In fact, by adding the internal heat to the external we obtain for the combustion of 100 grains of zinc a total which never varies. By this arrangement then, we are able to burn zinc at one place, and to exhibit the heat and light of the combustion at a distant place. In New-York, for example, we have our grate and fuel; but she heat and light of our fire may be made to appear at San Francisco. We have here an illustration of the constant law that in physical nature we have incessant transmission, but never creation.

I now remove the thin wire and attach to the severed ends of the thick one, two thin rods of coke. On bringing the rods together we obtain a dazzling light. Now, the light to be employed in our lecture is a simple exaggeration of this. Instead of a light produced by two cells it is produced by fifty. Placed in a suitable camera, provided with a suitable lens, this light will give us all the beams necessary for our experiments.

And now we are ready for work. The rectilinear propagation of light may be beautifully illustrated by making a small hole in a window-shutter, before which stands a lamp or taper, or animal, and placing within the darkened room a white screen at some distance from the orifice. Every straight ray proceeding from the object stamps its colors upon the screen, and the assemblage of all the rays forms an image of the object. But as the rays cross each other in passing through the hole, they also have combustion in a liquid. Water, for example, contains stores of oxygen, which may unite with, and thus consume, a metal immersed in it. It is from this kind of combustion that we are to derive the heat and light employed in the present course.

NEW-YORK AND SUBURBAN NEWS.

NEW-YORK.

The Jumel case was continued yesterday, but nothing of interest was alleged.

The Controller paid yesterday to the Department of Public Parks for current expenses $20,000.

Capt. Wm. J. Landon, of the Thirteenth Precinct Police, was placed on the retired list yesterday, with a pension of $800 per annum.

Adelphi Lodge No. 345, F. and A. M., of this City, elected Louis B. Shove, Master; Wm. Gordon, S. W.; R. F. Ware, J. W., as officers for 1873.

Dr. Henry Greene, to whom allusion was made in Tuesday's TIMES, died yesterday afternoon at the Park Hospital. The remains will be taken home for interment.

Pacific Mail stock continued to advance in price yesterday, touching 105¼ and receding to 104, an advance of 1½ per cent over the closing price of the previous day.

Coroner Schirmer will hold the inquest in the case of the victims of the Fifth-avenue fire at 10 A. M. today. It is probable that the investigation will occupy two or three days.

The German Independent Citizens' Reform Association of the Twenty-first Ward, F. Vogel, President, met at No. 602 Second-avenue last night, and organized for the coming year.

Dr. Hallock was yesterday appointed chief physician of the Insane Asylum, Ward's Island, with instructions to examine its condition and report the changes necessary for its efficient management.

Judge Sedgwick, of the Superior Court, yesterday, in the case of Rose McCabe, rendered a decision stating that he believed the lady to be so insane as to endanger her own person if permitted to go at large.

The American Geographical Society met last evening, Judge C. P. Daly in the chair. Dr. J. T. Rothrock, of Meadville, Penn., read a paper on "Our North-west: Its Resources and Its Inhabitants."

Germania Lodge, No. 94, of the Order of Good Fellows, gave its fourteenth annual ball, at the Harmonie Rooms, in Essex-street, last night, the proceeds of which will go to the charitable fund established by the lodge.

It is understood that Recorder Hackett will postpone his decision on the motion to quash the indictment against Hugh Smith, for conspiracy in the Erie robberies, until the submission of the trial of William M. Tweed.

Mr. William Bradford delivered an illustrated lecture last evening, entitled "Arctic Regions," at the Friends' Meeting-house in Gramercy-square, for the benefit of the New-York Colored Missions. There was a large attendance.

G. L. Fogg, a shipping agent, at No. 23 Cheniss-slip, was yesterday held in $500 bail by Commissioner Osborn, on a charge of having shipped William Wilson and others on the American ship Dauntless, bound for Liverpool, in violation of the new shipping act.

Rev. Wm. Taylor, D. D., pastor of the Broadway Tabernacle, returned to his church in the Baptist Church, Seventeenth-street, near Sixth-avenue, on "The History of the English Bible." As it is his first appearance, a large audience is expected to greet him.

Superintendent Thorne, of the Street-cleaning Bureau, reports that during the week ending on the 14th inst. 170 miles of streets were cleaned, and 15,200 loads of ashes and garbage, and 4,500 loads of dirt and street-sweepings were removed from the City, at a cost of $11,634 37.

John Conroy, of No. 155 Mulberry-street, was brought before Justice Cox, yesterday, charged with throwing Nathan Raymond, a conductor on the Sixth-avenue line, over the dashboard, injuring him severely. Conroy was remanded, to await the result of Raymond's injuries.

Conrad Schamberger, aged nineteen, living in a shanty in Seventy-third-street, near Avenue A, yesterday attempted to commit suicide by hanging himself in a shed in the rear of his residence. He was cut down by his friends before he had sustained any serious injury.

The officers of Prince of Orange Lodge, A. F. and A. M., No. 16, are as follows: A. D. Wildman, Master; W. T. Wardwell, S. W.; Samuel S. Carll, J. W.; Joseph Darrow, Treasurer; Alfred F. Tuller, Secretary; S. L. Wright, S. D.; E. Perry, J. D.; Stephen H. Tyng, Jr., Wm. T. Egbert, Chaplains.

Mr. Wallace P. Groom lectured last evening at Association Hall, on "Currency Needs of Commerce." The arguments adduced by the lecturer to prove what he termed "the fallacy of returning to specie payments," while not possessing the merit of originality, were put forward in a forcible form.

At a meeting of the Society for the Relief of the Half Orphans, at the Asylum, No. 67 West Tenth-street, last evening, Mr. Daniel D. Lord was elected a trustee of the Society, in the place of Mr. Geo. D. Phelps, deceased. Ninety-five children have been admitted, and seventy-five discharged during the past year.

Yesterday James Plunkett, aged twenty-three, of No. 229 West Twenty-sixth-street, and John McInnes, of No. 345 Mulberry-street, relied in a liquor saloon. McInnes drew a knife and cut Plunkett across the wrist, inflicting a severe wound. The injured man was attended by Dr. Beach, and taken home. McInnes made his escape.

On the occasion of a dinner party at Delmonico's Fifth-avenue restaurant on Nov. 23, Frank Delicrie, a flute-player, got drunk, and became troublesome to the guests, with disturbing. He turned three mirrors, valued at $1,000, and then escaped. He was captured on Monday night by two detectives, and locked up in the Tombs for trial.

The Treasury withdrew $1,345,846 46 from the banks yesterday. An artificial stringency was somewhat relieved by this circumstance, one-eighth and one-quarter of one per cent per day being paid for the use of money. Toward the close of bank hours this stringency was relieved, and loans fell to six and seven per cent—the closing quotation.

The Farmers' Club of the American Institute held its regular meeting yesterday at the Cooper Union Building. Discussions on various subjects interesting to farmers was had, and much information was elicited. A large number of strangers were present, and the meeting was one of the best of the season. Full reports see WEEKLY TIMES of this day.

THE POLICY MURDER.

Inquest was held at the Morgue yesterday on the Unknown Murdered—The Victim's Wife at the Morgue Identifies Her Husband.

The brutal murder of Nicholas W. Duryea, by John E. Simmons, keeper of the policy-ring, on Staten Island, on Monday evening, was the general topic yesterday. Duryea's body was removed from the Morgue at Stapleton early in the morning to the undertaker's store of H. Wilson, in Sixth-avenue. Mrs. Duryea, an accomplished lady about twenty-eight years of age, called at Capt. Caffery's office after breakfast, and by her husband, Mr. Peter Duryea. She was very much affected, and was dressed in deep mourning. She said that her husband had feared death as Simmons had sworn for some weeks past, and she had cautioned him against any encounters which might result in a quarrel. Her nephew, Mr. Peter Duryea, said that about three weeks ago he heard Simmons threaten to take Duryea's life.

She came for the valuables which were upon the person of her husband at the time of the murder. These consisted of a magnificent cluster diamond pin, worth $1,000, and another estimate $1,000, a beautiful sleeve diamond ring, worth $300, a pair of very fine diamond studs of great value, and a gold watch and chain for which Mr. Duryea paid $100. In addition to this, the murdered man had in his pocket nearly $13 in money. These valuables were transferred to Mrs. Duryea, who, on the night of the night of the murder a policeman came to her house on Staten Island, and, after arousing her, asked if Mr. Duryea was at home. She replied in the negative, whereupon the policeman, who was connected with the Staten Island Police, said, "I'm afraid something serious has happened to him," and departed without giving further intelligence.

Mrs. Duryea further stated that when Mr. Duryea left his home in the morning he said to her, "If the night is rough, I shall not come home to-night." At about 6 o'clock yesterday morning, some of her relatives, who had heard of the tragedy, proceeded to New-Jersey and at once proceeded in the cars to the shore opposite Mr. Duryea's residence. They then procured a boat and rowed across to Staten Island. When they reached the shore they were astonished to the extent of fainting exhausted with the effort of getting across. They reached the house of Mrs. Duryea, and notified her of the melancholy event which had happened. She proceeded to the City as soon as she could do so. Mrs. Duryea said she had no relatives in this country, and that she knew not of any disposition being made of the property in her possession. She left the Second Precinct, and went to Wilson's store, where the body of her husband was. She merely looked at it and left, as her strength was not sufficient to endure the ordeal. Drs. Vandewater and Wooster Beach made a post-mortem examination of Duryea's body in the afternoon. They found numerous superficial wounds, but the fatal injuries were found to be those described in the TIMES of yesterday. The skull was found to be fractured, corresponding to the terrible wound behind the left ear, where Simmons gave his victim the coup de grâce. Duryea's head was blown to pieces, the ball passing through the brain, and penetrated the abdominal cavity. Simmons is in the Park Hospital, under the care of Drs. Amabile and Hemmingway. He preserves his composure, and resolutely refuses to talk to any reporter. Officer Welsh, who had been guarding him during the night, was relieved by Officers Terry and Benisch, of the Second Precinct, yesterday. Coroner Keenan will hold an inquest at the earliest possible date.

Capt. Caffery has now in his possession the entire suit of clothing worn by the murderer when he committed the deed, with the exception of one button. There are no blood stains thereon, which bear evidence of attempted obliteration, but sufficient is retained to show evidences of the terrible struggle. These articles of clothing will be retained by Capt. Caffery until called for by the proper officials. Officer Welsh, who assisted Officer Terry in the case, has displayed considerable zeal in the matter, and has received the commendation of the public for prompt and decisive action.

The Tammany Society—Initiation of Members.

A special meeting of the Tammany Society, or Columbian Order, was held in Tammany Hall, last evening, Grand Sachem Augustus Schell presiding. The meeting was secret. It was ascertained that its principal business was to be the installation of Abram B. Lawrence and John Dunham as Sachems, elected in place of Charles O'Conor and Oswald Ottendorfer, who declined the Sachemship of the Order. Up to a late hour of the evening, neither of the gentlemen elected were present for installation. About thirty persons elected members of the Society were initiated during the evening. Among the best known were: Gen. Martin McMahon, Wm. Walsh, Judges Coulter and Ledwith, Wm. F. Miner, Counsel; Dangnas, Mr. Barnes, Sidney Post, Erlick Lyssner, Edward D. Gall, Dennis Burns, Wm. C. Conner, Jr., and James Maxwell.

A meeting of the Tammany Hall Committee of Organization was held yesterday afternoon, John Kelly presiding. Committees from the several Assembly Districts, whose delegations were recently elected, were in attendance to report upon by the Committee of Ten, were heard. The examination into the affairs of the Twenty-first District was a protracted one. Strong influence was brought to bear by Harry Genet to maintain his control of the organization in that district, and it is understood he succeeded in his object. The secretary stated that the Committee had finished the work assigned to it, and would make a full report, including of the names of members of the organization selected to fill the vacant seats in the General Committee.
